THE MAIL'S DAILY FASHION HINTS

TWO PLAIN AND ATTRACTIVE SHIRTWAISTS.

Paris Patterns Nos. 3296, 3305

All Seams Allowed.

Plain shirtwaists are always the ones most needed. Not only are they necessary for wear with separate skirts, but they are the style best adapted to tailor-made suits and no style is more worn. Pongee is now recognized as an economical wash material, and it can be made with a strip of Byzantine embroidery down the front, where the waist is closed, and at the collar and cuffs. Such other wash materials as linen, chambray and percale or madras may all be trimmed with the embroideries, which can be bought by the yard in white and colors, or they may be made perfectly plain, as preferred. The waist which we illustrate is one of the workaday styles. The front has two tucks at the shoulders in front and a band for the closing. In the back there is a small shoulder yoke, which may be omitted in making if preferred. The sleeves are of the plain shirt sleeve variety and are finished with cuffs which are intended to be worn with link buttons. The neck of the waist may be finished with a band, and with it one of the pretty embroidered collars may be worn. The pattern (3296) is cut in 7 sizes, 32 to 44 inches bust measure. To make the waist in the medium size will require 2½ yards of material 36 inches wide.

This waist is built along the simplest lines, but has a certain charm about it that will appeal to all. The perfectly plain front suggests itself for embroidery, and this form of decoration is very dainty and pretty. The neck is in Dutch style as here shown, but may be made with high neck if preferred. It will make up well in lawn, poplin, percale, linen or any of the pretty summer silks. The pattern (3305) is in 7 sizes, 32 to 44. Size 36 requires 2½ yards of 27-inch material. Price of Each Pattern, 10 cents.

PARIS ENTERTAINS ROYALTY

Paris, June 23—King Ferdinand and Queen Eleanor arrived here to-day and were received with full military honors. The programme for their few days visit is crowded with official functions and fetes.

man to drive you.

"Get the papers ready, you fool!" he snarled to the cringing notary.

"Dirck, drag that old hag away and keep her quiet till she's wanted. She'll have to sign as a witness after we're through with the ceremony."

He strode over to the Duchesse, his hands raised to wrest her from Fanchette, his face flushed, his eyes shot with blood, blindly set in his desperate purpose. And Ardens, at his shoulder, no less determined, had clutched cruelly at the old serving-woman's arm when a stifled exclamation from Maitre Georges, very busy in the background with his portfolio, caused them to turn on their heels.

"Hands up, both of you!" snapped a voice that sounded to them like the crack of doom, and both withdrew empty hands from behind their backs, raised these in instant obedience before two revolvers, cocked, not a foot from their foreheads.

"Step back to the wall," commanded their captors, pressing upon them, and they were wise enough to comply without a second's delay.

"Bout face. Keep your hand up." They turned, and remained in that ignominious posture while the whining Maitre Georges was inducted between them by the third of the three men who had thus surprised them, and who forthwith relieved Scager and Ardens of the concealed weapons they carried. Maitre Georges, it seemed, was unarmed.

Scager's gaze shifted to the clock and returned to her.

"By God, but you will, my girl," he cried hoarsely, glaring at her, quite beside himself, "and without any more ado. If you won't be led I'm the

SUFFRAGETTES CALL ON PREMIER ASQUITH

He Refused to Commit Himself or His Cabinet on Question of Female Franchise

London, June 23—Both suffragettes and anti-suffragettes had the long sought chance of laying their views before Premier Asquith today. The suffragettes have dogged the footsteps of the Premier for months in the effort to attain what they gained today. Their signal triumph was tintured with the bitterness that the anti's, too, were present at the meeting which was by appointment.

The Premier told the suffragettes that he could make no definite statement as to the attitude of the Cabinet on the question of votes for women. He would, however, he said, be glad to lay their views and representations before his fellow members of the Ministry. Then, after the matter had been discussed by the Cabinet, and a decision reached, a definite statement could be made.

THE VALUE OF PICTURES MOVING ONES ESPECIALLY

Ruskin, who had painfully tried with his pencil and pen to reproduce the beauties of architecture and of nature, rejoiced in the discovery of photography. He realized that with photography a man might live and die in his own village and yet be a great traveller. For the photograph brings everything that is worth while in the world before the eyes of the stay-at-home. When the mind travels the body need not travel.

Have you ever thought how much the photograph has taught you? You know the leaning tower of Pisa, or the great Pyramid of Egypt, or the Palace of St. Mark's in Venice, or the Falls of Niagara—hundreds of the world's wonders. They are clear in your mind, although you may never have actually seen any one of those things.

Through the photograph we travel in our imagination, and by the photograph we are tempted to travel physically.

The moving picture—lending a semblance of life—multiplies indefinitely the value of photography as a force in education.

And because the moving picture has such power—especially upon the immature minds of children—all moving picture exhibitions should be rigidly scrutinized; every picture put in motion before the eyes of children should pass a severe censorship and be officially licensed before its presentation.

No man for profit should be permitted to exhibit any picture that a good father or mother would refuse to put before a gathering of children in their home.

Any picture that would not be exhibited in a well-managed school should under no circumstances be open to the inspection of children—and of this rule there should be the strictest possible enforcement.

Moving pictures, teaching attractively the facts of history, industry travel and nature, ought to be and will be part of public education in every school.

But there should be the severest punishment for those that exhibit harmful pictures. Unfortunately, of such pictures there are many.—Boston American.

WHAT ENGLAND HAS DONE FOR EGYPT

When England assumed the sole control in 1882 Egypt was still bankrupt with a public debt of more than $500,000,000 and an income insufficient to pay the interest and carry on the government.

The public revenue in 1882 amounted to $4,500,000; in 1907 to $81,500,000 more than $10,000,000 in excess of the expenditures. On January 1st, 1908, the sum of $45,000,000 was in the general reserve fund and the public debt was reduced in 1908 by $1,600,000; it now is $497,000,000.

The cities and towns were without any drainage or sewerage, says the 'World Today' Only within ten years even Cairo itself with a death-rate of forty-six per one thousand has undertaken any such public work. In the country every canal was polluted and stagnant pools of filth were near every village.

The annual pilgrimages to Mecca, were likewise the means of introducing many diseases. Cholera and other epidemics were of frequent occurrence and their ravages carried off thousands and thousands of the population.

Little by little the various difficulties of the situation have been studied and solved by the administration until now Egypt may be considered a reasonably healthy country. Of course vast sums of money have been required to effect such a result.

At first enormous difficulty was encountered by the English in making changes in the system of taxation because the people so long accustomed to the betrayal of their interests thought the plans proposed were simply for the purpose of increasing their burdens. Little by little however they learned that another era had opened and finally their suspicions were calmed. They then began to work with renewed energy and now, secure in the fruits of their labor they are not merely improving their own conditions but are building up the reputation of their country.

ANOTHER AUTO FATALITY

Mayo, France, June 23.—An automobile occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Henry, Americans and Madame Maten ran into a ditch and was overturned near Castellan in the department of Basses Alps today. Madame Maten was killed outright and Mr. Henry was badly injured. The latter's wife escaped unharmed.

A MILLION A MINUTE

A ROMANCE OF MODERN NEW YORK AND PARIS
BY HUDSON DOUGLAS.

"She's in there," said Quaintance, under his breath, and tiptoed from his hiding-place.

O'Ferral, following, caught at his arm.

"Don't burst in on them. Let's hear all those fellows have to say first, if we possibly can. They have not locked the door behind them. We are free of the meeting."

They halted within the passage between the two doors, and listened intently, without compunction. Quaintance had one hand on the key, one ear at the keyhole.

Within, in the dimly lighted, dishevelled studio, the Duchesse and Fanchette had sprung to their feet as Scager pushed past the frail barricade they had erected lest anyone entering should surprise them asleep. After him came another, a little, wizened, dried-up mannikin, black-clad, of evil countenance and behind him came Ardens, his swart features grimly inflexible. He pulled the door to, and Scager spoke first.

"Hope you haven't been anxious while I've been away, Dagmar," he observed with pretentious solicitude. "I couldn't get back any sooner. I've been very busy on your behalf the whole day, and I've brought you news. I was going to say bad news, but better be honest. It isn't bad news, for either of us, and I'm sure you won't break your heart over it; your husband was nothing to you, you know. He's dead, Dagmar. Dropped off quite suddenly—heart disease, the doctors say."

She stared at him, in doubt and dismay unspeakable, striving to understand, vain to disbelieve what he said. But his eyes did not drop before hers as usual. He gave her back her glance for glance, boldly, seemed to be speaking the truth. And, little cause as she had to esteem 'die Duc, the shock of such news, told thus almost stunned her.

"What your cousin says is quite true, Miss—Duchesse," Ardens affirmed solemnly. "This gentleman is a lawyer. He'll tell you anything else you may wish to know."

She darted a quick, despairing glance in the direction of Maitre Georges, and that individual, well primed with whispered instructions by Scager on their way upstairs, shambled forward.

"Alas, Madame," said he with a great assumption of sympathy, "what my friends tell you is a sad fact. M. le Duc lies dead—downstairs. The body was brought hither that—that—that—"

The clock in the corner struck the hour in a sudden, sonorous clang, and almost instantly the Notre Dame tolled eleven.

The Duchesse shivered violently, leaned still more heavily on Fanchette's trembling arm. Scager started forward.

"Come, Dagmar," he said, in what he meant for a tender tone, "you mustn't give way, you know. It is sudden, of course, but think—it's all for the best, isn't it! He was nothing to you, and—you're free of him now. Think what that means to you—and to me."

His face darkened as she shrank from him in such loathing as was plain to all. And, spurred on by a virulent glance from Ardens, he made his fell purpose more clear to her.

"This is no time to stand on ceremony. You know what I want you to do for me, Dagmar, and—you're free to marry me now. Take my word for that—or, if you won't, we'll take you downstairs and show you the body. It was brought here to satisfy you that you're really free."

"And just think of me as well as yourself," he went on querulously. "I'm more than fully entitled to my half of our uncle's fortune, and you'll be none the worse off for the other half either. It will do you no harm to go through the form of marriage with me, and I'll swear you'll never see me again after that unless you send for me. All I want is the marriage certificate, to show to the lawyers in San Francisco—a little enough thing, too, considering all that my uncle did for you. You will, Dagmar, won't you? For my sake!"

He looked at her in impatient appeal, a great sense of his own unfortunate plight moving him to unusual pathos. And she at length spoke.

"I will not," she said very distinctly.

Scager's gaze shifted to the clock and returned to her.

"By God, but you will, my girl," he cried hoarsely, glaring at her, quite beside himself, "and without any more ado. If you won't be led I'm the
