YORK STREET

A MILLION A MINUTE

A ROMANCE OF MODERN NEW YORK AND PARIS

BY HUDSON DOUGLAS.

Next morning he was up betimes, betook himself with his cigar along Fifth Avenue. None of his overnight schemes seemed so feasible in broad daylight, and he was temporarily at a loose end. Dagmar—he called her Dagmar now—Dagmar was in New York, and he might meet her anywhere. Or again he might not. Between these two eventualities there was the slender thread of chance to guide him to that which was the goal of all his desires. How could he tell which way to turn? He must go blindly to the outcome whatever it should be.

Passing the Holland House he saw a string of hansoms come careering down the avenue. The first of these slowed up, drew in toward the kerb, its driver hailing him with the habitual, "Keb, sir?"

He shook his head indifferently, and sauntered on, but the man turned, and followed him, reiterating his monotonous inquiry until Quaintance lost patience with him.

"Devil take you!" he cried irritably. "Haven't I told you I don't want a cab?"

"Do you not wish to drive in poor old J. J.'s keb?" asked a hurt voice and he jumped round to stare up at the figure on the dicky. It wore a sabbly boxcloth coat bedecked with huge pearl buttons, and a silk hat, somewhat too glossy in that connection, beneath whose curly brim appear Cornoyer's grinning countenance. Quaintance looked back and saw that the whole string had drawn up close behind. The second held a single passenger, whose ruddy, weather-beaten face, adorned with a contented smile, a huge cigar, stamped him the lawful driver of the first. The others carried baggage.

"Jump in," Cornoyer begged. "Jump right in, Newman, and I'll drive you to the docks. You must come with me to the steamer. I am on my way to Paris."

Quaintance could not but laugh at the idea of the procession, and an erratic impulse, added to the fact that an assiduous policeman was eyeing them suspiciously, caused him to join it.

"But no tomfoolery," he stipulated. "Drive straight, old man. Don't play at funerals unless you want to miss your boat. It's nearly ten already."

Cornoyer cheerfully adopted his advice, and proved himself no clumsy whip by the dexterity with which he shaved each imminent disaster courted by the pace he set. The other drivers emulated him and many curious glances were directed towards the strange cortege which went whipping down the avenue. Cornoyer's last appearance on that fashionable thoroughfare did not lack eclat.

They turned round by the Cornucopia in order that the traveler might leave cards there, and early visitors to that quiet club flocked to the windows to see him start again, returning his grief-stricken flourish of farewell with interest. Everyone liked Cornoyer, and his ridiculous exit was just what might have been expected of him, but Quaintance felt glad when they once more gained Fifth Avenue, and held straight on for Washington Square and Morton Street. He was still more relieved when they reached the dock, and Cornoyer having doled his borrowed overcoat and paid off his transport so liberally that they accorded him a round of cheers, permitted himself to be led toward the throng alongside the steamer.

"Gee whiz!" said that gentleman suddenly. "She seems to be going away."

This was all too true, for there was already a widening gulf between her lofty steel side and the pier. The last of her warps had been let go. She had started for Havre.

He shrugged his shoulders, and turned to Quaintance with an air of inexhaustible patience.

"Chance of mine I didn't send my baggage before me!" said he.

But Quaintance paid no attention to him. He was staring up at a figure which had crossed the deck from the cabin-companion to the poop-rail. It was Dagmar. She was gazing forward, her face turned from him, but he knew instinctively that it was she. And, ere he could bring himself to cry out to her before all these people, she had moved away, out of sight.

The shock of such sudden misfortune stunned him. He was too dazed to notice a face in the crowd on shore, with two crafty eyes which were watching him with malevolent mirth.

"You're too late this time, mon ami," muttered Jules Chevreton to himself, "and—you've lost her now, for good. She'll step right into our CHAPTER XII.

DOMINIC SEAGER MAKES SEVERAL STARTLING DISCOVERIES.

After Dominic Seager had paid for his passage to Paris he had about nine hundred dollars left of the thousand obtained from his arbitrary confederate in the scene which was to make both their fortunes. Having settled his Long Beach hotel bill and entertained himself lavishly on the eve of departure, there were less than eight hundred to take on board ship with him. His sporting instincts cost him some three hundred during the voyage, so that when he at length reached Paris from Cherbourg, he could not count even five hundred in his note-case.

But no such commercial calculations disturbed his complacent faith in the future. It would not be long before he could sneer at such petty sums altogether, and then he might find means to mark his displeasure with Arendsen's vulgar parsimony. The mere idea that he had been limited, and at a juncture so all-important, to such a paltry total expenditure galled him whenever he thought of it, but, as he seldom thought of such matters while his pockets were still sufficiently lined for the day, he did not suffer unduly in that respect.

LADIES' SEVEN-GORED BELL SKIRT.

Paris Pattern No. 2125

All Seams Allowed.

The old-time bell skirt is once more coming into favor for the walking skirt. The plainness around the hips and the pretty ripple around the foot make it becoming to nearly all figures. It must be hung and pressed with great care, otherwise the style of the garment is completely lost. The pattern is in 8 sizes—22 to 36 inches, waist measure. For 28 waist the skirt, made of material with nap, requires 9½ yards of material 20 inches wide, 5½ yards 36 inches wide, 5 yards 42 inches wide, or 4½ yards 54 inches wide, without nap, it needs 9½ yards 20 inches wide, 5 yards 36 inches wide, 4½ yards 42 inches wide, or 3½ yards 54 inches wide.

Price of pattern, 10 cents.

THE TORREY MEETINGS

The executive committee of the Torrey Evangelical Campaign has completed its plans and will not meet again before the opening of that campaign, except in case of emergency. Seating accommodation for 2,500 people has been prepared at the Arctic Rink. A large corps of ushers has been organized and it is thought that every preparation for the handling of large audiences has been made. Spiritual preparation for the campaign has not been neglected. Prayer meetings for men are to be held every noon at the Y. M. C. A., and its ward has its afternoon meeting for women.

Dr. Torrey is expected to arrive here Saturday night. He has just concluded a highly successful campaign in Texas.

MATRIMONY CURED HIM

Washington, May 10—Harry Lindenkol, an electrical engineer of the Central Electric Company at Schenectady, was engaged to be married on April 19, to Miss Clara Everbox, when he was stricken with typhoid fever. His condition was alarming, due to worry over the postponement of the wedding. His physicians saw the only way to relieve his mind was to have the ceremony performed.

At the time set a wedding party assembled in the young man's room in Garfield Hospital here. The ceremony was performed. The patient was relieved of worry and he is now on the road to recovery.

YOU HOUSE CLEANING?

Tiresome task, isn't it? Nothing but dig! dig! dig! Dirt from morning 'til night, and then too tired to mix the batch of Bread. No need to, anyway!

SCOTCH ZEST BREAD

is baked to take the place of your own. It's light, white, and for moistness can't be beaten. Fact is, some people stopped baking, they found Scotch Zest Bread "O SO GOOD!" and such a saving. Why not eat it now the tired time's here?
