THE DOUBLE CROSS

"Yaqui has friends among the Aztecs, senior, and he says—yes. Why? What have you done, my son, to gain the enmity of my people?"

"One of them saw me kiss Felipa," I blurted. "He thought I had no right—and he told the others."

"Quite sufficient explanation, my son. There remains this. Why did the Senorita Alva take such deep interest in your welfare that she travelled all the way from Mexico City—a night's ride—to save you from the Aztecs? And how came she to know that the one and only way to end their animosity toward you was to tell them that you were betrothed to my daughter?"

I noticed that the Don had his eyes on the little iron cross beside the candle.

"Don Justino," I cried, "does Felipa happen to bear the sign—"

I stopped short, because of an instinctive feeling that this was not the time to speak to Felipa's father of the cross.

"Don Justino," I began again, this time heaving a deep sigh, "this is all as much a mystery to me—as the happenings in this room on the night Felipa was born, are to you."

"It may interest you to learn, Senor John," he said, "that my agent at the railroad station, Diego, tells me that the Golden Senorita, upon arrival in Guanajuato this morning, went at once to the house of the stranger who appeared here last evening wearing a black mask. Her duenna was with her, of course."

"Ah!" I cried. "The stranger himself told the Senorita Alva of my betrothal to your daughter."

"Possibly," he assented. "But how did this stranger know of the betrothal?"

"Don Justino—who is that man?" "Senor John," he said, "may we not hazard a guess that the man of the black mask is—the son of Leon Alvarado?—the man to whom the Senorita Alva is said to be engaged to be married?"

A few moments later Don Justino limped away.

I went to bed. But the surprises of the evening were not yet over.

A man wearing a white zarape glided into the room, stepping with the silence of sandalled feet.

"Pardon, senior." "Bueno, Yaqui."

"I thought best to warn you, senior, and only you, of what I know. To tell Don Justino or the Senorita Felipa would cause sleep to be lost in this house tonight. Senior, the greatest of de Gastenedas appeared to me today. I would know her as well in Hell as in the Heaven to which the sight of her transported me."

Senior, I swear it—when the Senorita of the hair of gold told me to cry out to the Aztecs that you were the betrothed of the daughter of Don Justino, she meant—herself."

Yaqui caught up the iron cross from the table beside the bed and held it close to my face.

"Senior," he said, "it has something to do with this cross."

After standing the cross back on the table, he thrust a note in my hand, saying:

"The servant who rode in the chariot today with the Golden Senorita asked me to hand you—that he bade me tell you that it was sent to you by the strange man who appeared here last night wearing a mask. Adios, senior."

As Yaqui strode out of the room I read the note.

"A second warning," it said. "The woman you seek may be the daughter of Don Justino, but she is not Felipa. Beware of making a mistake."

CHAPTER XXII.

A CONTRACT WITH THE DON.

The following morning Don Justino called Felipa and myself to his own table on the corridor to have coffee with him, just as had been the case with Padre Aurelio the morning before.

"I hope you will be pleased to ride to Guanajuato with me this morning, Senor John," the Don said. "You must see the most beautiful of all the cities of the two Americas. I find I can use my foot now without pain."

It was not till I went to the patio to mount my horse that Felipa and I had a chance for a word in private.

"I know my father," she said. "He means to sell the mine. All financial matters relating to the mines are conducted at his office in Guanajuato. For some good reason, he assured, he is taking you to that office."

At that moment a messenger rode in with a letter for the Don.

"From my banker, Senor del Treveno," the Don said. "He writes that he has heard of the betrothal—from the officers of the Black Cavalry—and he invites us to be his guests over night in Guanajuato and to attend the opera that will be given there this evening by a great company from New York."

The result was an agreement that the Don and I should now ride on as already planned, and that Felipa and Swastika should come to the city later, in the diligencia and bring the baggage with them, all of us to meet at del Treveno's for seven o'clock dinner, one detail of the arrangements being that Felipa should keep an appointment at the photographer's in Guanajuato before coming to the residence of our host.

The Don and I now went back to the house to give the servants orders regarding the evening clothes which we wished packed.

TERMS OF THE AGREEMENT

"The government of the two countries having made this agreement from the conviction that, if confirmed by the necessary legislative authorities, it will benefit the peoples on both sides of the border line, we may reasonably hope and expect that the arrangement, if so confirmed, will remain in operation for a considerable period."

Only this expectation on the part of both Governments would justify the time and labor that have been employed in the maturing of the proposed measure. Nevertheless, IT IS DISTINCTLY UNDERSTOOD THAT WE DO NOT ATTEMPT TO BIND FOR THE FUTURE THE ACTION OF THE UNITED STATES CONGRESS OR THE PARLIAMENT OF CANADA. BUT THAT EACH OF THOSE AUTHORITIES SHALL BE ABSOLUTELY FREE TO MAKE ANY CHANGE OF TARIFF OR OF ANY OTHER MATTER COVERED BY THE PRESENT ARRANGEMENT THAT MAY BE DEEMED EXPEDIENT. We look for the continuance of the arrangement, not because either party is bound to it, but because of our conviction that the more liberal trade policy thus to be established will be viewed by the people of the United States and Canada as one which will strengthen the friendly relations now happily prevailing and promote the commercial interests of both countries."

SIFTON FAVORED RECIPROCITY.

In a newspaper report of a speech delivered by Hon. Clifford Sifton at St. Paul, Jan. 10, 1903, he is reported to have said:

"On the subject of reciprocity Mr. Sifton spoke freely. He endorsed all that Mr. Hill had said on the subject, and expressed himself in favor of any treaty that would give the citizens of both countries equal advantage. He had no sympathy, he said, with those Canadians who expected the United States to give something for nothing, and he thought as little of the Americans who expected the Canadian to do the same thing. The Canadians expect to give one hundred cents for every dollar they get."
