A woman may feel helpless, even in an employment agency. In spite of the fact that Adam came first, it is always polite to say "After you" to a woman.

THE DOUBLE CROSS

And in a twinkling, I formed a plan which, I believed, would square my account with him forever.

The moment his feet touched the rock floor I bounded upon him, pulled his revolver from its holster and hurled it far into the darkness of one of the corridors. Then I passed my hand swiftly over him in search of a knife. Finding none, I let go of him, saying:

"Now, Ruiz, either you or I remain in this place, dead. We will fight a duel—the strangest duel man ever fought. Your gun lies somewhere out there in the darkness," pointing down the corridor into which I had tossed the weapon.

Ruiz had not resisted my onslaught nor had he even shown repentance. Now he smiled disdainfully.

"We shall each seek to try to find that gun," I continued. "We will fight it step by step, inch by inch if it takes days. And the man who gets his hand on it first—I say, Ruiz, since the stranger proved that you can't fight with a sword—try the pistol."

"Ravings of a wild man," he said, making no move to unleash himself from the rope. "The duel is not necessary."

I must have looked, indeed, a wild man. My beard had grown stubbly and black all around my face. My clothing hung on me in rags.

"I have come to take you to—liberty," he said.

"Have you a note from Felipa," I asked suspiciously.

He tossed me a scrap of paper on which Felipa had written:

"Follow Joaquin."

"Why do you—my enemy and undoer—do this?" I asked.

"I do not trust you," I added.

"Then my mission ends in failure," he said. "I will signal Yaqui to pull me up."

And he gave the rope two distinct tugs.

"I understand," I blurted, in my hasty way. "You think that, by helping me to escape, you will gain favor with Felipa."

Yes, I assured myself that probably Felipa had promised Joaquin some large reward for his present act.

"No," I cried. "You'll not go up. I'll cut that rope."

"What with, snore? Your will?"

True. I had no knife.

The rope had grown taut, Joaquin's feet had left the ground.

"Signal Yaqui to stop," I said.

"I will go with you."

He gave the rope a single tug—checking his ascent.

"Now," he said, after I had plied him with further questions and had decided to trust him, "put these on."

He handed me a bundle containing a peon's outfit of clothing.

"By wearing the garments of an Aztec," he explained, "you will easily elude the Indians who hunt you. And, your Indian-like complexion, too, will help you to pass unnoticed."

I threw off my clothes and put on the white cotton suit, the huge sombrero and the leather sandals; then threw the crimson zarape over my left shoulder. I was now, in outward appearance, a peon—a peon with fifty thousand dollars in my money-belt.

Fifteen minutes later I was again in the blessed sunlight, trotting along beside Joaquin's horse, seemingly as his servant. Down and up the trail we travelled, till, under cover of night, we arrived in Guanajuato.

As we skirted the Alameda, I saw three men standing by a lamp-post. One was a portly doctor of the same beggar whom I had seen at the railroad station on the morning of the arrival of Royal. It was Basil Meldrum. As he stepped aside to let me pass, I noticed that he limped. His companions, to my amazement, were none other than those two henchmen of Royal's called Sam and Doc.

As I passed them I saw Sam and Doc look at me keenly, then speak a hasty word to Meldrum, who nodded his head vigorously, as if in affirmative answer to some question.

A few minutes later, in a narrow, obscure street, Ruiz halted in front of a 'doe' house, saying:

"The domicile of Bartolome, the public letter-writer. He expects you, Senior St. John. My mission is fulfilled. Adios."

"I thanked him for what he had done for me, yet, as he rode away, I could not help adding:

"And now, Ruiz, may your path end mine nevermore cross."

I found Bartolome propped up in bed, a very sick man, attended by his bony, wizened wife—a woman with a shifty eye and a wholly evil face.

"I have for many days been unable to pursue my calling, Senior St. John," the letter-writer said, "hence was grateful for the gold which Swastika brought from her mistress—in payment for harboring you. Here is a note for you, senior, from the Senorita Felipa."

Barely I tore open the note and read:

"Before you receive this I shall be in Mexico City, waiting for you—at the Hotel Jardin, for I have decided not to open our town house. I shall make all arrangements for our marriage. You will arrive at Bartolome's house about eight o'clock this evening. The train for Mexico City leaves at nine—get that train—come to me at once—if you can."

"You may be delayed, however, because of a danger that threatened you other than from the murder charge— from which charge you are now comparatively safe. Some mysterious influence that I cannot fathom has been brought to bear upon the authorities. It is agreed that, since I am willing to marry you, you shall be left free—pending investigation of the terrible happenings."

"None but the Aztecs believe my father to be dead. Officially, he is pronounced merely 'missing.' Not until he has been missing seven years will the courts pronounce him legally dead."

"At the request of the stranger in the black mask, Larry Annesley—the young English editor and publisher of El Monitor—has gone in search of my father, though in what direction he should conduct the search, God knows. Dear old faithful Larry!—to do this for love of—my father!"

"Meantime I have met your secret service friend, Basil Meldrum, who also has faith in your innocence regarding the disappearance—no one says murder—of my father. He says that the Royal gang is reassembled for the robbery. Two of that gang, the ones called Sam and Doc, have been found, and Meldrum is ordering now to be in league with them. He is using them as decoys to get the remaining two members of the gang, Royal and Terry. Otherwise he would arrest Sam and Doc at once."

"Meldrum says your life would be in constant danger from these two men should they discover your whereabouts. Therefore he thought best to put them on your track the moment you come from the mine. You will probably pass them on your way to Bartolome's house. They want the money my father gave you, and will resort to any desperate means to get it."

THAW'S RELEASE TO BE DELAYED

Newburgh, N. Y., Oct. 17—Persistent reports that Harry Thaw's release from the Matteawan Asylum is expected within the next three months are denied by Dr. James V. May, superintendent of the institution.

"I can state most positively that Thaw will not be released before Jan. 1, or for some time after," said Dr. May. "Since I have had charge here in August not one member of the Thaw family, nor his attorneys have been to see me. Once or twice Mrs. Thaw came to the asylum to see her son, but I never had anything to say to her nor she to me."

The superintendent would give no opinion upon the sanity of Thaw.

FIVE DOCTORS GAVE UP ALL HOPE

Said she Would Die of Kidney Trouble

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" CURED HER

MOUNTAIN, ONT., Dec. 14th, 1910.

"For six years, I suffered from dreadful Kidney Disease. My legs and lower part of my body were fearfully swollen, and the pain was awful. My people thought sometimes I was dead, as I would faint from the agony. Five different doctors attended me, and all said it was kidney trouble and gave me no hope of getting well. A kind neighbor told me to try 'Fruit-a-tives' and mentioned the case of Mrs. Fenwick, who was cured by them."

I took 'Fruit-a-tives'—and in a short time, I began to feel better, the swelling went down, the pain was easier, and then 'Fruit-a-tives' entirely cured me. All my friends look upon my recovery as a miracle, and I am unable to praise 'Fruit-a-tives' enough."

FARNSWORTH & JARDINE AND GIBSON PROPERTY

(Canada Lumberman)

Much interest has been aroused in timber circles in the United Kingdom and especially at Liverpool, by the announcement that Messrs. Farnsworth and Jardine of Liverpool have purchased the business and trade interests of Mr. Alexander Gibson of New Brunswick, for the sum of £200,000.

The Liverpool firm are one of the stronger 'pillars' of the timber trade at that port and have, for many years, been in intimate relationship with most members of the trade, through the regular public sales of timber which they have conducted. These sales have become an institution of the timber trade in England and there can be few, if any, members of the trade in the midland or northern countries of England who are not interested in them. The firm have long held a front rank position in the commercial arena of Liverpool.

They have extensive city offices in Dale Street, Liverpool, and at Seaford, to the north of Liverpool, and store yards, sheds and salesrooms within the timber trade's main storage area in the north part of Liverpool near the great docks. The acquisition by Messrs. Farnsworth and Jardine of the valuable Canadian timber business named, has been of especial interest to many members of the trade owing to the fear of a falling off in the importation of Canadian timber to England, which has prevailed of late. That Farnsworth and Jardine should have taken over the Alexander Gibson interests, has restored confidence in the Canadian trade. The prospects of the trade are good; it is said, or this old Liverpool firm, with their intimate knowledge of the trade would not, now, have acquired so large an interest in it.

BRUTAL MURDER OF KANSAS FAMILY

Ellsworth, Kan., Oct. 17—Slain as they slept, Sunday night, the bodies of Will Showman, a chauffeur, his wife and three small children, were discovered last night, in the Showman home by a neighbor. The features of all the victims were battered beyond recognition by the blows of an ax, the baby's head being severed.

ORGANIC CHURCH UNION ENDORSED BY METHODISTS

Toronto, Oct. 17—The ranks of the Ecumenical conference showed signs of heavy defection at the last morning session. A good stroke of policy on the part of the programme committee was shown in bringing on the discussion of Methodist union at the last sitting, when the feelings of the delegates were mellow with the prospect of farewell.

"Organic union is one thing and actual union is another," said Rev. W. Redfern in a paper on Methodist union. "Sectarianism has largely ceased to be harmful to the spirit of fellowship. The idea of a larger union in England is going to be realized sooner or later. The lessons of the great divisions must not be overlooked."

"The Evangelical churches everywhere," said Rev. Enoch Salt, of London, "ought to act together as far as they honestly and honorably can—but they don't. The coronation ceremonies were participated in by only one church while half the churches in England and more than half of Protestantism stood and looked on."

Mr. Salt's address was on federation missions and education. He used strong terms such as "scandalous waste and public scandal," in describing the present situation. He thought the tendency was in the right direction, and hoped this conference would accelerate it. He had no favorable words for undenominational missions.

Rev. Homer B. Tuntz, D. D., of New York, gave a breezy address on "Economy in the use of Forces and Means." He said: "This question should have been discussed long ago. It must be faced now even if it causes the name of some denominations to disappear. The situation in some places at home is heart breaking. We should not," he said, "put in two or three men where common sense and reason call for one."

"The colored brethren have five denominations where two at most would do. The situation is not only bad economy but sinful. The local church is a means to an end. The programme is the whole gospel for the whole world. The M. E. church spends $35,000,000 for home work and $2,000,000 for foreign. It sustains 17,500 ministers at home and 1,000 abroad."

"The age in which we live," said Dr. Lidgett, "is an age of reunion." He approved all the sentiments expressed in favor of unionism among the various Methodist branches.

Rev. Dr. Haigh, president of the Wesleyan Church, made a parting address expressing most cordial sympathy with union.

Rev. Dr. Carman made the last speech in the discussion. He said: "If you want to see the spirit of Christ manifested we must move on and make sacrifices and lose our names."

Rev. Dr. Carroll read a statistical

A TWO MILLION DOLLAR TEMPLE

Washington, D. C., Oct. 18—To the many memorable events which cluster about the making of the nation's capital must be added one other, the laying of the corner stone of the $2,000,000 Scottish Rite Temple with solemn Masonic ceremonies this afternoon. The occasion was made notable by the presence of the entire Supreme Council of Scottish Rite Masons of the Southern jurisdiction, together with large delegations of the membership of the order from Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Delaware, New Jersey and the District of Columbia. Five thousand participated in the big parade through the city to 16th and S streets, Northwest, where the new temple is to be erected and where the ceremonies of the day were held.

The ceremonies opened with an invocation by Rev. William T. Sydney, chaplain of the Supreme Council. James D. Richardson of Tennessee, Sovereign Grand Commander of Scottish Rite Masons for the Southern Jurisdiction, delivered the opening address after which John Russell Pope of New York, the architect of the temple, delivered the Masonic implements appropriate to the occasion to the grand master. The Masonic rite of laying the corner stone was then performed according to ancient usage by Grand Master J. Claude Keiper of the district of Columbia. Rev. Richard Pardee Williams, canon of the Episcopal Cathedral of St. Peter and Paul, pronounced the benediction. The musical features of the programme were furnished by the Scottish Rite Choir of St. Louis Mo.

The Americans are now placing on the market a preparation containing the extract from Henna leaves, which is having a phenomenal sale.

This preparation is called SALVIA and is being sold with a guarantee to cure Dandruff and to grow hair in abundance. Being daintily perfumed, SALVIA makes a most pleasant hair dressing. Ryan, your druggist is the first to import this preparation into Fredericton and a large, generous bottle can be purchased for 50c.
