JUST LOVE

(By Johanna Single)

From the first it had been foolish, an explosive combination of youth, summer, moonlight and the propinquities of a vacation house party. Jack and Angle met in June, loved in July, confessed in September, and by Christmas had coaxed her parents. The Allens were reluctant, for Angle was ridiculously young, but they had no objection to Jack.

The course of true love ran, for a time, most smoothly. Holland, Sr. gave his son an adorable little cottage; the Allens produced a cheque to cover furnishings. There was much shopping, much trousseau making, merry parties and vows, and kisses hardly as surreptitious as they should have been. There was peace—a treacherous peace.

Jack had made one blunder—he had not "told her all." The experience of his elders seems never to make a young man see that when he puts his heart for life into a girl's soft hand, he is thereafter in a tight place. She will be supreme; she wants to be not merely first, but all. She is jealous of his mother and sisters, his friends, his bull dog, his pipe, anything whatever that before her time loved him or gave him aid or comfort. No occasion had so far arisen for jealousy, and Jack forgot the weak place in his armor. He was off guard.

Angle had come upon his consciousness like oblivion of all that had gone before. Like all lovers, he said he had never loved any one else—and thought he spoke the truth. It was a secret, unconscious disappointment to the girl that Jack had no "past" whatever. She would have liked to forgive him to have consoled him for sorrows—deep wounds of a cruel fate from which her love would henceforth protect him. She would have liked details of past unhappiness offered up to her like incense.

"Tell her before somebody else does," is the first commandment to an engaged man. Jack disobeyed—and suffered. At first, to do him justice, he had really forgotten to tell Angle about Tessie Burton. He had been engaged to Tessie at college. The affair was brief, ending in trouble as the sparks fly upward. Tessie broke it because she saw another man. Her methods were prompt, at least. He had told Tessie he would always be true to her and wait for her until he died, and other familiar quotations.

When he did remember this, he knew that if he told Angle now, she would ask why he had not told her before. It would have seemed serious, worth having hidden until he was more sure of her. No; it was too late. Jack trusted to luck, and to the fact that Tessie was in the East and lived in another town. He thought himself safe.

Early in January that fatuous young man took his bride-to-be on one of their many shopping tours, which always ended with tea or chocolate and a lovers' tete-a-tete before going back to the family circle, where everything was a bustle, despite the fact that wedding was to be strictly a family and intimate friends affair. The gift season, just past, had broken into preparations and dressmakers possessed the house. Now, Jack and Angle were choosing the last of the furniture—a sewing chair and table for Angle, who was hesitating between mahogany, Circassian walnut or a perfectly cunning arrangement in wicker.

Enamored of wicker, Tessie stood with a dainty gloved finger to her lip and considered. Jack was loving every look of her, the brown hair and eyes, the demure, bird-like plumage of brown cloth and fur. Abject adoration shone from his eyes. Then a light laugh beside him made him jump—it was a laugh he knew.

A cold wave scurried down his spine, as he turned and knew that his sin had found him out. He lifted his hat and took Tessie's offered hand and with what grace he might while she swept Angle from head to foot with a glance of her wide blue eyes. She took in the situation, but waited for her cue—to do her justice she gave Jack his chance.

Jack fumbled shamefully. He had immediately and delightedly presented Angle to his "old college friend, Miss Burton," it would have been all right. Instead, he presented "Miss Burton" to Angle as he might have any mere acquaintance. Angle's perfectly courteous but indifferent manner showed she had never heard Tessie Burton's name before.

Tessie, hardly believing her own senses, took characteristically prompt revenge—she never waited. Chatting lightly, she said she had come for a week with Cora Chandler, and was out shopping. Her manner to Jack was artlessly familiar. She called him by his first name, and several times by a college nickname, as if unconsciously. Also she let her hand rest a moment on his sleeve.

"Cora told me of your good fortune," she remarked, settling her veil over her shining fair curls. "It makes me very happy for you. Miss Allen, I am delighted Jack has fallen into such charming hands! Now I shall never reproach myself about him again—he was so young and tragic, you know!" Here she laughed. "I forgive the creature for having forgotten me. It's fortunate men can forget so soon, isn't it? So comfortable for them! So pleased to have met you, and wish you all happiness! Good-by!"

She fitted out, and Jack stood dazed. He wished dully that Tessie were not so confoundingly pretty. Would explanations help him? He tried careless nonchalance, and returned to the matter of the chair. Angle did not look at him, but in a cool little voice spoke to the salesman. She was somehow dignified and remote—out of reach.

"I think I will not decide about the chair today," she said. Then she turned to the floor, which Jack opened, and turned homeward.

Jack saw that there would be no (To Be Continued.)

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY CALENDARS FOR 1911

The 1911 calendars of the Intercolonial have more of real artistic merit than for several years past, being a new departure in design and coloring, and those fortunate enough to receive them will find them tastefully ornamental as well as all they should be in the way of general utility.

On a background of green and brown, a capital representation of fine cones, the words "Canadian Government Railways," "Intercolonial Railway," and "Prince Edward Island Railways" appear on the top in black letters of shaded guinea gold. From the centre of the lettered space the I. C. R. emblematic moose head appears, surrounded by a halo of scarlet, in which is the usual text "The Past Line, The People's Railway."

The centre of the calendar is taken up with a richly colored sketch of the "Ocean Limited Express" skirting the shores of Bedford Basin, on the way out of Halifax. The scene is well chosen, the cloud tints and the coloring of the far blue hills flanking the greenish blue expanse of water having a most natural effect, especially to those familiar with the scene and its surroundings. The calendar tab is of sage green, with lettering and figuring of white. On each side of the tab a panel of dark brown with yellow lettering is devoted to extolling the excellence of those two famous I. C. R. through trains, the "Ocean Limited" and the "Maritime Express." A border of purple gives a finishing effect to the general design and completes a calendar that ought to be greatly admired and eagerly solicited.

The Toronto Globe of Jan. 6, 1911, has the following:

Among the thousands of calendars annually turned out and distributed to the public, there is ample evidence of artistic selection, and it seems that there are yet no signs that appropriate and new designs are wearing out. All that have come to the Globe this year are attractive, but the production of the calendar of the Intercolonial Railway marks a new beginning. Some beautiful scenery, as well as one of the Canadian government's fine trains, are shown in a dark background, making the calendar one worthy of a prominent place in the office or the home.
