MISS DILLON WRITES OF BERMUDA TRIP

ample of which he gave us. Walking to the bridge above the pool, he gave three knocks with his cane, then running to the opposite end cried, "Come on, Come on." Instantly there is a splash, a rush to where he stands, the bread is gone, and wonder of wonders, so is the color of the fish, for by some strange process they change color after eating, the light ones becoming dark and vice versa. We linger a few minutes here until another party of tourists arrive, and as the bridge is narrow we make room for them. Continuing we pass the house where Thomas Moore lived and see his calabash tree, green hillsides, with white houses peeping from cedar groves form an entrancing picture. Small wonder the poet wrote "Could you but view the scenery fair

That underneath my window lies,
You'd think that nature lavished here
Her purest wave, her softest skies."
Not far from here we came to the Crystal Cave. This is a natural grotto decorated with nature's handiwork and possessing features of wonder and admiration.

A descent of about one hundred feet is made into this cave by means of a series of steps, and the interior of the cave is lighted by electricity. At the foot of the stairs is a lake of clear water subject to tides, so that a floating bridge is thrown across. On the mirror like surface of the lake is the reflection of lights and stalactites making a picture such as one might suppose existed only in fairyland, while away in the innermost recesses, where it seems impossible for the hand of man to reach glimmer more lights. Surely Aladdin's wonderful cave was not more entrancing. We have to climb one hundred and fifty steep steps, so that by the time we reach the surface we are quite tired, but after a short rest we drive around another way home, arriving just in time for luncheon.

At two o'clock we were among a party of excursionists who enjoyed a trip on a steamer to various points of interest.

The most interesting sight on this trip, and one long to be remembered was the examination of the coral gardens. The visitors were transferred to large flat bottomed boats, in the centre of each was a glass with seats round, so that every one had an equal chance of seeing the sea gardens of living coral, sponges and other marine life. Sometimes these wonderful gardens seemed scarcely more than a foot from the bottom of our boat, at other times they dropped abruptly to a depth of thirty feet, but even at this distance they were quite visible. On our homeward way we stopped at the Aquarium, on an island. This building was once a British powder magazine. Here we obtained a beautiful and interesting view of living fishes—some of them very handsome.

On Sunday afternoon we had another drive, this time to Gibbs Hill light house, the hill being the highest land in Bermuda. Here we obtained a fine view of the charming islands, while on all sides extends the mighty Atlantic. On inquiring why the light house flag-staffs were decorated with flags, we were told it was a signal that a ship was sighted, and, more than that, it was a Halifax steamer. It sounded good to our ears, for the sight of anything from home is always welcome to the traveller.

As Monday was free and we could wander at will, we paid a visit to the shops, and here I may say that Hamilton possesses a good number of up-to-date shops. We found the British coinage still in use here—shillings and pence—which was a little confusing at first, but it's not hard to understand after a little practice. Still, none of us would agree to go back to the old system in our country, as the decimal system is by far superior, both in rapid calculation and simplicity.

On approaching the land we noticed particularly the Hamilton Hotel, as this was to be our home while in Bermuda. The building is a large one, with a spacious hall-room, pleasant piazzas, and cool retreats for reading and writing. The extensive lawns are ornamented with flowers, shrubs and palms, giving a touch of color to the big white building. The guests, of whom there is a large number, seem to be on the best of terms with one another, so that life at the Hamilton is very pleasant indeed.

Our regret is that we cannot stay longer, but on Tuesday morning we are to sail again for New York.

BERMUDA TO NEW YORK.

Tuesday morning, Oct. 2', like all the days in Bermuda, was clean and bright. Quite a number of the Hamilton guests were to leave with us, and by nine o'clock we were all at the pier which was crowded with people. For the departure of a ship is the signal for a good deal of commotion.

Mingled with the farewells was the music of the accordion, played by an old colored man, who for years has had his post on the wharf and steamers. He played all the late popular airs, and the steamer swung away from the wharf to the strains of "Home, Sweet Home," "The Star Spangled Banner," and "God Save the King," out of courtesy to the American and Canadian tourist alike.

Soon the tender was made fast alongside the steam packet, passengers and luggage were quickly passed from one to the other, and in a few minutes the little steamer was deserted and the big ship was under way for New York.

The voyage home was uneventful. A portion of the deck was artistically decorated with the British and American flags, and lanterns and given over to dancing on the first evening out. By the second, we were out of the warm waters of the Gulf Stream, and the time was passed indoors at whist or in the music room.

Two ships only were seen. At about eight o'clock on the evening of the first day we saw a red light away in the distance. Sooner or later she came nearer, and the big steamer passed astern like a phantom ship. On the next morning a tramp steamer was sighted on its way to Halifax.

The Aerogram, a small paper printed on board, was issued on the second day giving the news received by wireless, so that we could keep in touch with the world's news even on the bosom of the Atlantic.

Another rousing party, a number of bright young girls from Stratford, Ont. winners in the newspaper contest, were on board. Owing to the tough passage out, we had no opportunity of intercourse with them, but we became acquainted in Hamilton, and these acquaintances reopened into friendship on the homeward journey. They were accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Dingman. Mr. Dingman is ex-mayor of the town of Stratford, and proprietor of a newspaper there. We found him and his good lady, as well as the entire party, very congenial company.

We were due to arrive in New York at 10 a. m. Thursday, Oct. 26, but the fog was thick and we were some what late. However, by slow degrees we entered New York Harbor, and for the third time since leaving home looked upon the spires and smoke of the great city. After a good deal of ceremony with the customs officials, who were very solicitous as to the amount of tobacco and cigarettes we had in our suit cases we took to East 17th St. German restaurant.

After another visit to the Metropolitan Museum, a walk in Central Park and a ride through the subway it was time for our steamer to leave.

It was our good fortune to return to Boston by the Fall River Line, in fact, all through our trip was planned so that we could get the very best in the line of travel. In a former letter the steamer Priscilla by which we travelled from Fall River to New York was described as a floating palace, but your correspondent had not then seen the "Commonwealth" the newest of these famous lines of steamships. This magnificent steamer is the largest and costliest in American waters, two million dollars being expended in her construction. Everyone was on deck to view the scene going out of New York. For miles along our way stretched the waterfront of New York on one side, Brooklyn on the other. It was evening. On either hand was a brilliant display of electric light while high above all shone out the light at the extreme top of the Metropolitan tower, seven hundred feet above the street level. Soon after leaving, we took our dinner in a spacious dining room, electric lights with the softest of red shades adding to the brilliance of the scene. After dinner while speeding over the waters of Long Island Sound we withdrew to the luminous grand saloon and for two hours listened to music of extraordinary excellence played by a high class orchestra. We were spending another night on the water but so easy was the motion of the boat, so grand were our surroundings and so restful our slumbers when bed-time came, that we might well imagine ourselves in one of the apartment hotels on Millionaire's Row.

We would have stayed a couple of days on this steamer, but we had to stir ourselves betimes in the morning for we boarded an early train at Fall River for Boston, arriving there in time for breakfast at the Hotel United States.

In Boston we visited Faneuil Hall, known as the "Cradle of Liberty," standing in the centre of the market district. The building is being remodelled, so that we did not see it at its best, but passing upstairs, we entered the drill hall of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery, filled with historical pictures, portraits and relics.

In the gun room we saw the guns used in the American Civil War and in cases the medals and epaulettes of famous generals. The building is used as a Town Hall for meetings of various

SAGE TEA WILL DARKEN THE HAIR

Restore Faded and Gray Hair to Natural Color—Dandruff Quickly Removed

There is nothing new about the idea of using sage for restoring the color of the hair. Our great-grandmothers kept their locks soft, dark and glossy by using a "sage tea." Whenever their hair fell out or took on a dull, faded or streaked appearance they made a brew of sage leaves and applied it to their hair, with wonderfully beneficial effect.

Nowadays we don't have to resort to old-time, tiresome methods of gathering the herbs and making the tea. This is done by skillful chemists better than we could do it ourselves, and all we have to do is to call for the ready-made product, Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, containing sage in the proper strength, with the addition of sulphur, another old-time scalp remedy.

The manufacturers of this remedy authorize druggists to sell it under guarantee that the money will be refunded if it fails to do exactly as represented.

Don't neglect your hair. Get a bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur today and notice the difference after a few days' use.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.

St. John, Nov. 25.—Col. Lamb of the Salvation Army Immigration Department, arrived here today. In an interview he dealt harshly with New Brunswick's immigration policy. "Why doesn't New Brunswick get busy?" he asked. "Why don't you keep immigrants here instead of sending them to the west? You have the farms and the land, but no one knows about them."

HAVE FOUND WITNESS

Baptist Church Society last night accepted the resignation of its pastor Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson, under indictment charged with poisoning his former sweetheart, Avis W. Linnell. The action was taken at the regular monthly meeting of the society after some members had made vigorous but vain objections. A month ago the society voted not to accept the resignation, and the matter came up again last night on the minister's renewed request that he be relieved of the pastorate.

kins, and was given to Boston by the man whose name it bears. We visited, too, the old State House, a relic of old colonial days. On the top of this building are the lion and the unicorn just as they were in the days of George the Third, before the war.

From there we went to the printing office of The Globe. Half an hour or more was profitably spent in seeing the wonderful machines. The evening edition was just being printed, and we saw the new paper coming from press which turns them out at the rate of six hundred a minute. Here we separated to spend a week among friends in Boston. Mr. Horn of the Frank Tourist Co., had been our conductor during the entire trip in America and to Bermuda, and was most obliging and attentive in superintending arrangements for our comfort. Any one wishing to get the most and best out of a trip of this kind cannot do better than to join a Frank Tourist Party, particularly if fortunate enough to secure the services of efficient guide.
