CHAPTER LVIII.

MRS. JOHN ST. JOHN.

With Don Justino I boarded our special train at twelve o'clock that momentous morning, for the eight-hour run to Mexico City.

I was now on my way at last to wed Felipa. Was I happy? Yes, supremely so. Yet my very joy was a grief to me. For—I thought of Alva.

Did Alva really love the son of Leo Alvarado? If so, then I was the man beloved by that wondrous woman. Her guardian and my father were one and the same man. That man had trained Alva to be my mate. Yet I was now hastening to Felipa to make Felipa my bride. In my heart was exultation. In my mind, depression.

The Don and I had had a special car all to ourselves. In the three Pullmans ahead, however, were some three score wedding guests from Guanajuato and La Luz.

So busy had the Don been in reading his affairs at the hacienda, and so many persons had ridden with us down to the railroad station, that not until now, in our Pullman, as the train pulled out of Guanajuato, did I find opportunity to ply him with the myriad personal questions that were in my mind.

"Don Justino," I said, "you received a telegram this morning. Did it reveal all the secrets of the last few weeks?"

"I know much, my son, but not everything. But I have been up all night. You, too, must be tired. We have eight hours in which to sleep. Let us go to our berths. But before we reach Mexico City—dress for your wedding."

He started toward the stateroom at the forward end of the Pullman, saying that I was to take the rear room. "But Don Justino," I protested, pointing to the stranger's cloak which I still had with me, (and I also had the mask and stiletto in my pocket), "what of him, the stranger? Who is he?"

"The stranger," the Don answered, "has returned whence he came—into the Everywhere. He will be seen no more. Let us sleep."

And he entered his stateroom and closed the door.

At eight o'clock that evening we arrived in Mexico City, and at once hailed a blue cab, both the Don and I being now in evening dress.

"To the Alvarado Men in, Chapultepec Road," was the Don's order to the cochero.

"Don Justino," I said, as we rode along toward Chapultepec, "as my father, John St. John of New York, and Leon Alvarado of Mexico City, were one and the same man—and as he is dead—Alva is now alone in the world."

"No, not all alone, my son. Her father and sister are living. But there, ask me no more. After the wedding, my son, you shall know all."

On arrival at the Alvarado Mansion the Don and I were met by servants, who asked that the Don go at once to the drawing-room, where the wedding guests were assembled, while they led me to the library, saying that they took me there at the request of "el presidente."

"El Presidente?" I said in wonder. "You mean the president of—"

"Of the Republic!" they answered. In the library, however, instead of finding the President of Mexico, I found—Alva.

I threw the cloak across the table, laid the mask on top of it, and then took out the stiletto. Alva viewed the weapon with strangely fascinated eyes.

"John! John!" she exclaimed, in a horrified whisper, "he is dead? Is it really true, John? He died?"

And she pushed the stiletto slowly under the cloak, as if to hide from her sight its red-stained blade.

"I have waited here for you, John," she said, "to introduce you to your best man at the wedding, namely, the President of Mexico. I shall myself act as bridesmaid—for Felipa. The President, John, is the executor of your father's will and the trustee of your father's estate. Here he comes."

The greatest living North American entered the room. I knew him at once, from hundreds of photographs I had seen of him. He was something more than the President of Mexico. He was the greatest soldier, statesman, administrator, and jurist on the western continent.

With the bearing of majesty itself, with an eye that seemed to me all seeing, with a hand-grasp that told of his fatherhood of all the people of his country, he greeted me.

"I loved your father," he said. "He was my friend. I promised him that whatever I could do for his son I would do. I have him my solemn pledge that I would personally attend your wedding."

"I will leave you now," said Alva, "and go to—my father."

I looked at Alva in amazement as she left the room and I said to my "best man."

"Senor el Presidente, did I understand the Senorita Alva to say that she was going to—her father?"

"Yes. Her father—Don Justino de Gasteneda."

"Alva Alvarado is Don Justino's daughter?"

"There is no Alva Alvarado. But come, your bride is waiting."

Makes Hair Grow

Ryan has an invigorator that will grow hair or money back.

The time to take care of your hair is when you have hair to take care of.

If your hair is getting thin, gradually falling out, it cannot be long before the spot appears.

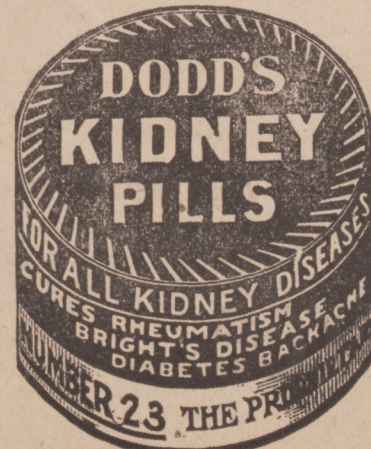

The greatest remedy to stop the hair from falling is SALVIA, the Great American Hair Grower, first discovered in England. SALVIA furnishes nourishment to the hair roots and acts so quickly that people are amazed.

And remember, it destroys the Dandruff germ, the little pest that saps the life that should go to the hair from the roots.

SALVIA is sold by Ryan under a positive guarantee to cure Dandruff, stop falling hair and itching scalp in ten days, or money back. A large bottle costs 50c. The word "SALVIA" (Latin for sage) is on every bottle.

INSANITY DEFENCE IN MURDER TRIAL

Rockville, Dec. 1—After repeated delays and postponements, it now appears certain that the trial of Richard W. Allnutt, accused of murder, will be taken up in the Montgomery county district court here early next week. Numerous features in connection with the case combine to give promise of one of the most notable murder trials that has taken place in this section in many years.

The crime with which Allnutt is charged is the murder of his sister, who was slain as her mother's home near Dawsonville, this county, on March 14 last. Several months before the tragedy Allnutt had married and after his marriage had boarded at the home of his brother, Lawrence Allnutt, at Dawsonville.

Richard Allnutt was desirous of taking his wife to his mother's home to live, but there had been objection on the part of members of the family and Allnutt went to his old home on the morning of the alleged murder to talk the matter over. The refusal of his family to consent to the proposed arrangement is said to have angered Allnutt, who is alleged to have grabbed the handle of a pitchfork and viciously attacked his sister, Mrs. Viers, the aged mother and the latter's old friend and companion Miss Jane Rawlings. Mrs. Viers's skull was crushed in and she died a few hours after the attack. Mrs. Allnutt and Miss Rawlings recovered though for a time their condition was critical.

During the long period of his confinement in jail awaiting trial the wife and aged mother of Allnutt have been steadfast in their loyalty to him. Three noted criminal lawyers, W. Outerbridge Spates of Brockville, Arthur Peter of Washington and Marshall McCormick of Berryville, Va., have been engaged for the defence. Several eminent alienists will be put on the stand in an effort to prove that Allnutt was insane at the time he is alleged to have murdered his sister.

In the last two years the machinists have had 152 strikes and the great majority of these were won.

A total of $13,816 in donations and $57,000 in strike benefits has been paid by the International Union of Frewery Workmen during the past year.

Made Her Look Twenty Years Younger

READ MRS. HERRICK'S SWORN STATEMENT

STATE OF NEW YORK } ss.: ROCHESTER, N. Y.
COUNTY OF MONROE }

Nancy A. Herrick, being duly sworn, deposes and says: When I was a girl I had a head of heavy, long, dark brown hair which was the envy of my friends and which attracted the attention and remarks of strangers, but as I grew older it commenced to come out. When my hair was quite thin and gray, I was induced by the many good reports I had heard of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur to try a bottle; and you can imagine my satisfaction when I found my hair was fast coming back to its natural condition. I continued to use Sage and Sulphur until my hair was as heavy, dark and smooth as when I was a girl of sixteen. It is now four years since I began using Sage and Sulphur and my hair is in splendid condition.

Sworn to before me this 14th day of July, 1911.
