THE MISSES YOUNG*JUST LOVE

tea together, no cosy tete-a-tete. He floundered about for words, and did the clumsiest thing possible.

"Tessie Burton—I knew her at college—"

"One would judge as much," she replied. Don't you think it's getting colder?" Her polite tone was down to about zero. Jack agreed with her. Nothing else was left him. He knew he would have to explain pretty quickly and convincingly. Tessie had been hopelessly ill-fated, and of course it was embarrassing for Angie—he knew that. He would simply make a clean breast of things.

"Angie, dear, let me explain." Angie lifted her pretty brows. "Explain—what?"

"Anything that needs explanation should have been explained before." "It was only a foolish college engagement—"

"And you said you had never loved anybody, but me—"

"Angie—I haven't. That wasn't love, it was a silly—it didn't last long, and—"

She interrupted. Being spotless, too young to have been in love before herself, she was merciless. "If it wasn't love it was wicked to be engaged to her—a horrid girl like that, too. I know happiness like mine—could not last! Your engagements don't seem to last long—doubtless, you will be as easily consoled this time as you were the first—or have there been still others?"

"Angie," he said sternly, "do you know what you are saying? You can't mean to—!" she had drawn off her left glove, and was taking off her ring, which she handed him. She had not, in fact, meant at first to do anything, but being angry, hurt, nervous from overwork and waiting, she was hardly herself. But she would not relent. She would punish him—at any cost to herself.

"Angie—you know I love you truly—this has gone too far—"

"Altogether too far!" she assented, turning in at the gate. "You can come in and tell mother it is all over. Tell her I would like to go to Florida for a month—if some one can go with me. As for you—perhaps 'Tessie' will have you back?"

They were in the hall by this time and she fled upstairs. She had taken him at a disadvantage on the street where he could not forcibly take her into his arms and make her listen to him.

Us for the Allen's, they listened to Jack; then they went up and talked with Angie. She simply said it was all over, and she didn't want to hear about it, and would not see Jack. Thinking him too young, anyhow, they did the easiest thing—postponed the wedding indefinitely because of their daughter's health, and called the family doctor, who obediently prescribed the southern trip. Then they waited to see what would happen, Jack calling every day in order to disarm gossip.

This happened, Angie sorry for what she did, even while she was doing it, worked herself into a fever and was really ill. Gloom settled over Jack who sent flowers and letters. He persisted, but she would not give him a chance—she brooded over his "untrustworthiness" until it became a crime to her, and very real, really surely was with her, but she denied her own heart.

Jack suddenly did the unexpected. She had grown used to his persistence when it ceased without warning. He closed the little cottage, returned what goods would be taken back, settled all his bills himself, and sent the house key to Angie by her father. He himself went on a hunting trip, a fact that the papers chronicled, and which Angie saw. He accepted her decision.

This came to the girl like a shock. She dressed, and in a few days came downstairs to sew by the fire. Suddenly she refused to go South at all, and kept the family in hot water with her moods. She knew she had been a fool, and wished she were dead. Her young, terrified soul saw a long, unloved, unloving life before her. He had gone, and she had sent him—and for nothing—absolutely nothing! She saw that. Now he was probably glad to be free from so unreasonable a love—perhaps he had not really loved her at all! In a few days she became convinced that he would be shot while hunting, and imagined herself into positive fear. Perhaps he had really cared after all, and had gone just to court an accident.

It all ended in a way as simple as it began. One raw February twilight, Angie chanced to be alone at the fire. She heard the bell ring. A queer terror seized her—was it a telegram? She actually was expecting any calamity at any moment. She hid her face in her hands.

The door opened, and Jack walked in. He had meant to be impersonal, to hope she was feeling better, to make no allusion to the past. But when she lifted a pale, tear-stained face and gave a little cry of joy at seeing him, he took two long steps and gathered her into his arms. It was as foolish as any of the rest of it. She had her face against his and implored him not to explain—she did not care, anyway. Nevertheless, he made a clean breast of everything.

It seemed about three minutes later when the family arrived to interrupt things. The family had been having a hard time through no fault of its own, and was glad to have an end of the trouble.

ALLENDALE*NOW SOLD IN CANADA

In Less Than Three Years, Parisian Sage the Splendid Hair Tonic, is Sold All Over Canada

There is reason for the phenomenal sale of Parisian Sage in Canada during the past three years.

And the reason is plain to all. Parisian Sage does just what it is advertised to do.

Ask A. J. Ryan about it he will tell you that he rigidly guarantees it to cure dandruff, stop falling hair or itching of the scalp in two weeks or money back.

There is no reason whatever why "my man or woman should fail to take advantage of the above generous offer.

But one thing that has made Parisian Sage so famous is its peculiar power to turn the harsh unattractive hair that many women possess into luxuriant and radiant hair in a short time. Women of refinement the country over are using it and it never disappoints.

Sold everywhere in Fredericton by A. J. Ryan for 50 cents a large bottle.
