THE DOUBLE CROSS

CHAPTER XXXVII.

THE PENDULUM IN THE PIT.

The shaft of the Farthermost mine could not be far distant. What if Vallejo, the watchman at that shaft, were to challenge me now?

If Vallejo heard me, he gave no sign, as my horse slowly picked his way over the loose stones of the arroyo. I resolved to stick to the canal until daybreak. Then I would cut across country, back to La Luz. Thus, having avoided recapture, I would enter the town, not a prisoner, but a free man, securing to myself the honor of voluntary surrender.

On and on my horse stumbled, slipped, plodded for more than an hour, and the first signs of the lifting of night could be discerned when suddenly—I heard the sound of hoofs above me on the floor of the canon.

"That you, John?"

It was Felipe's voice.

"Yes. Who is with you?"

"Yaqui!" she answered.

"And come now," she cried, "when I had joined them and while Yaqui was freeing me from the lariat with which I was bound to the post, we must get to the Farthermost Shaft before daybreak. Remember Amore. I will save you, John, as I could descend into the mine."

"No, I will risk to La Luz and surrender," I said.

"The Aztecs would kill you," Felipe cried. "The man hunt is on—with the Aztecs in a rage particularly because of the disappearance of my father's body—for I suppose Joaquin told you of that. Soldiers, Rurales, gendarmes and peons are beating all the trails. Your only refuge is the mine."

"Felipa, how did Captain Ruiz come to be so conveniently on hand at the hacienda? Why was he not with his regiment, in the sham battle?"

"Why," she answered, "when he rode away from the hacienda after the dance, his horse threw him and he returned as far as the gate, looking for his mount, when suddenly the portero opened the gates, saw Joaquin and cried:

"'Eldefonso is dead and the place has been robbed!'

"Joaquin rushed in and went at once to my father's room. Not finding my father he then rushed to your room, John, and there he found my father's body lying on your bed. He then awakened me, and both Swastika and myself went to your room and saw my father lying dead. We searched the other rooms for you, but you could not be found, and when we returned to your own room, my father's body, to our utter bewilderment, had disappeared. Joaquin swore that you were the assassin. I swore, with equal vehemence, that you were guiltless. But no one would listen to me, and Joaquin then sent word to the Aztecs and gonferrerie at La Luz to begin the hunt for you, while he himself, with four of his troopers, started down the trail after you, believing that you were making for the railroad. My poor father!"

"Her silence was eloquent of her grief."

"But I must not give way to my feelings, not now," she said, finally. "I could not endure inaction. When Joaquin came back, telling us of your escape at the mouth of this canon, I felt that you would remember Amore and take to the arroyo. I called Yaqui, and here I am. But, it will soon be daylight. We must hurry. The Aztecs call you 'The Judas,' and they swear to cast you into the Catacombs alive."

"She paused a moment, then suddenly cried:

"And tell me, John, why were you out on the trail at such an hour of the night?"

"The question startled me, though I had expected it, and I came near to blurring out the truth about Alva and the cross. Finally I stammered out something about being so exhilarated by the confetti game that I could not sleep. I said, I wanted exercise, motion, action. And apparently she saw nothing in my answer to arouse suspicion."

"Be quick, Yaqui!" Felipe cried as we drew near the Farthermost shaft. "Get Vallejo, the watchman, out of the way while the snore and I wait here. Send Vallejo off on some false scent after the Senor St. John."

"As Yaqui rode away, I said to Felipe:

"Day is breaking and now I can see your dear face, dimly."

And as we dismounted she cried: "Then tell me, John dear, what you see in my face?"

She came to me now, holding out her arms appealingly and saying: "Do you not see in my face, John, something that you need now more than ever?"

"Love!" I exclaimed. "But, why, Felipe, do you not give me the sign of the cross?"

She stepped back and away from me her face expressive of utmost alarm. "Once again you speak of that!" she said, in a low, deeply agitated voice. "In the name of the Virgin, John, tell me what you know of—the cross?"

"Has the stranger—but no!"

As she spoke these words, fear was written in her every feature. Fear of what?

"What of the stranger?" I asked. "Oh—nothing. Nothing at all."

"And you do not love the stranger, after all?"

"Love the stranger? What a question! I love you, John, and only you. There! I have said the words at last."

I caught her to me and interrupted her words with kisses as she continued:

"John, I have loved you always—from the first moment of our meeting on this very spot. But I wanted to make sure. And now that you are in trouble—in terrible danger—I want you to know that I trust you, that I believe you guiltless and that—you have won me."

FINE RESIDENCE FOR GOVERNOR

No residence in Toronto will equal that of His Honor the Lieutenant Governor of this province, according to the plans and preparations of Mr. F. R. Heakes, who planned and designed both the building and the landscape effect for the new property in Chorney Park. The Chateau Frontenac in Quebec and the Hotel Laurier in Ottawa are practically the only consistently carried out French chateau designs in Canada. In Chorney Park house will be built a French renaissance chateau consistently carried out. It will be more elaborately finished than the Chateau Frontenac though of course not so large. Its windows will look out over a magnificent prospect of woods, valleys and gulches. Around its walls will circle a terrace with a stone balustrade overlooking the treetops of a steep gully leading down to the old belt line tracks. In front of the porte cochere will extend a balustraded, brick paved court, connected by a bridge over a gully with a circular outer court, also brick-paved and balustraded. A drive leads from the outer court over another bridge to Roxborough Avenue. Down stone steps from the terrace on the lower flat will be situated the tennis court, surrounded by trees, with a peep into the beautiful valley of the Don. North-east of the main building on the edge of the ravine is the site for the stable and garage. The servants' wing stretches out from the main building in an unconventional slanting angle with kitchen, scullery, serving pantry, servants' dining room and sitting room, bed rooms and everything complete and all practically detached from the main building.

Where the grounds are level on the North and West a stone wall will form the outer boundary on the ravine side, to the east and south the terrace will be supported by a retaining wall of concrete reinforced by twisted steel rods and wire mesh binding. In one place this wall will be 30 feet high with almost a bird's eye view of natural forest grounds reaching down away into the valley. The house itself will be built of gray Credit Valley stone. The contract for the stone work was let to Fred Holmes and Son at $125,000. The front entrance or porte cochere leads first to a vestibule then to a large circular lobby, behind which is the grand hall. The latter will be open for three storeys to a skylight, with a balustrade at each story. To the right of the hall is a State reception room and drawing room are arranged en suite. To the left a magnificent State dining room and a private dining room for the Lieutenant Governor's family on ordinary occasions. At the rear of the Grand Hall is an immense hall-room, with an alcove and a verandah overlooking the ravine. The living room adjoins the main hall on the east, with a plan room of glass and a writing room.

The building will have a frontage of 156 feet, with a depth of almost as much. With three storeys a tile roof and its pointed turret towers, the French palaces. The inside construction will be carried out in wood and marble. The color scheme has it will follow somewhat the lines of not yet been decided upon. Steel and terra cotta provide practically for fire-proof construction.

TO LAY TEMPLE CORNERSTONE

Washington, Oct. 17—High degree Masons from all parts of the United States are beginning to arrive in this city and everything is in readiness for the solemn laying of the corner stone tomorrow of the new $2,000,000 Scottish rite temple to be erected at 16th and S streets northwest. The program for the ceremony is very elaborate and the exercises will be highly impressive. Sovereign Grand Commander, James D. Richardson, former member of the Congress from Tennessee, will deliver the opening address, after which John Russell Pope, of New York, the architect of the Temple will deliver the Masonic implements appropriate to the occasion to the grand master. The Masonic rite of laying the corner stone will be performed according to the ancient usage by Grand Master J. Claude Keeper of the District of Columbia, assisted by the other officers of the Grand Lodge. It is expected that nearly five thousand Scottish Rite Masons from all parts of the country will attend the ceremony.

PROBLEMS OF CITY RULE UP

Davenport, Ia., Oct. 17—Municipal problems of great variety are to be discussed by the League of Iowa Municipalities, which opened its fourteenth annual meeting here today with a large attendance of mayors and other officials of the leading cities of the State. Features of the opening session were an address of welcome by Mayor A. C. Mueller of Davenport and the presidential address of Mayor J. R. Rector of Waterloo. The meeting will continue until Thursday.

"LOOSE AND RAGGED," SAYS SACKVILLE TRIBUNE

(Sackville Tribune)

In Saturday afternoon's football game here the St. John fifteen was snowed under by a score of 25 to 0. As may be judged from those figures the contest was anything but interesting. As a matter of fact it was anything but good football, the winners as well as the losers showing some very loose and ragged play.

ROYAL NAVAL CLUB,

To the Zam-Buk Co.
Dear Sirs,—I have found Zam-Buk most reliable for healing cuts and abrasions; while for the relief of skin irritation it is invaluable.
(Signed) RODNEY M. LLOYD, Admiral.

Zam-Buk Cures Bad Burns.

Stoker Kingsnorth, of H.M.S. "Cochrane," says:—"I slipped and fell with my arm on an exhaust steam pipe, which fairly frizzled the skin. At once the ship's surgeon dressed my arm, but the burns took the wrong way, owing to a lot of dirt from the pipe setting up blood-poison. A large scab appeared, and from underneath the festering flesh, matter oozed out. I was in fearful pain and didn't know how to get ease."

"For weeks I remained under treatment, but the ordinary ointments proved no good. Indeed, I got worse. I therefore obtained a supply of Zam-Buk and almost as soon as this was applied I got ease. From the very first application, healing commenced; and a few boxes of Zam-Buk healed my wound completely."

Zam-Buk cures eczema, ulcers, abscesses, ringworm, bad leg, varicose ulcers, piles, cold sores, chapped hands, babies' sores, etc. All stores at 50c, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. Send 1c stamp for trial box.
