THE DOUBLE CROSS

CHAPTER XLVII.

THE WEDDING DAY.

The following day was one of the happiest of my life. It was my wedding day. I was to marry the most adorable girl in the world.

At breakfast that morning Alva appeared in a ravishing dressing-gown of pink silk and foamy lace. As she came into the breakfast-room, I said: "Well, senorita, did the stranger leave the city—as he intended?"

"He returned to Guanajuato last night."

"Why did he not stay for my wedding?"

"That's a thoughtless question from you, John."

She looked strangely sad. "You mean he loves Felipa," I said, "and therefore could not witness our wedding?"

"You were in grave danger of losing Felipa, John."

"I know it, felt it," I said. "There is something mysterious in the relationship between him and Felipa. I have seen things that would make some men commit murder. Yet I cannot believe—"

"What have you seen?"

"I discovered that they—well, to put it mildly, I know that they were alone together in his house at—"

"You and I, John, were alone in this house last night. We are alone here now—except for a paid duenna and the servants. Supposing Felipa should learn of this."

"It would be all up with me; she would marry the stranger then, sure."

"But you know, you say, that she was alone with the stranger—I suppose you were going to say they were alone in his house at Guanajuato. Well, then, according to your theory, you should give her up and marry—"

"The sad look left her eyes and she bazed at me expectantly."

"What about the application for the annulment of our marriage contract?" I asked.

"The Minister of Justice will be here presently, John. When he comes I will sign it."

"No," she contradicted, "I will sign it now, while I am in the mood. Where is it?"

"In my room. I'll go get it."

I went to my room and got the paper.

Returning to the breakfast-room, I found Alva standing facing me, looking exactly as she looked that night when she first appeared to me in my rooms at the hacienda to show me the true sign of the cross.

Her eyes were fixed upon me now, just as then. Her bosom undulated, she seemed terribly agitated. Her nostrils flared and contracted; her eyes flashed lightning; her beautiful hair of gold, now twisted round her head, seemed to radiate a light.

"John," she said in an eager, tense voice, "are you sure you love Felipa?"

She shuddered as she spoke the words. Why she was so wrought up I could not comprehend.

"I love Felipa enough," I said, speaking gravely, "enough to sign this paper. I have already signed it, already signed away my fortune—as you see."

I put the document before her and handed her my fountain pen, which she took, mechanically.

"You, Alva, of all persons, certainly know that my signature on that paper means that I love Felipa enough to sacrifice my only chance of getting the money my father left me. Therefore, you must know that I love Felipa."

She sat down at the table, with the paper before her.

"Sign here," I said, indicating the line under my own autograph.

With swift strokes of the pen she signed her name. I took the paper from her, saying:

"Alva, I suspect that you are as glad to sign this paper as I am. I believe you love some other man, as I love some other woman—and you are as glad to be free of our contract as I am."

"Yes," she assented in a low voice, and trying to overcome her emotion, "I sign because—I love—a man."

"Is it the stranger?" I whispered.

"God help me, John."

"Why don't you marry him?"

"Because," she answered, "there is Felipa."

She had dropped her golden head upon her arms on the table and now she sobbed pitifully.

"The Senor Reyes," announced a servant, appearing in the doorway. Alva jumped up, keeping her back toward me, and walked to the window.

"Don't let that man come in here, John," she said. "Go to the library and give him that paper. In a few hours he will bring back—our contract. And then—it will be all over, John—all over."

I went to the library, and found the Minister of Justice waiting there, impatient at my short delay in coming to him.

"Every moment is precious," he said. "I would undertake to do this for no living person except—the stranger."

"The stranger!" I repeated. "What has he to do with it?"

"Everything, St. John, everything. Good-bye for the present. I'll be back in a few hours with the cancelled contract."

And he rushed out.

I went back to the dining-room and found Alva now with dry eyes and flushed face. She spoke feverishly, saying:

"Come now, I will show you—the bridal chamber. For you and Felipa will come here tonight—after your wedding."

"I'm so happy to see you—natural again," I said.

"John, never remind a woman of her tears. From this day—from tonight—I wish to forget—everything."

I followed her up the stairs, and she showed me to a suite of rooms that servants were even now filling with flowers and making ready in many ways for the coming of the bride and groom.

"And here is the telephone," she said. "You'd better call up your servant, Romero, at the hotel, and tell him to bring your trunk."

She spoke in what seemed to me a forced tone of merriment, as if she had all she could do to keep back the tears.

"I'll order the car for you—to be here at eight o'clock," she said, as she walked down the hall with me.

"And I'll see you once more before you—go to Felipa," she added, as she turned into her own room.

I called up the Jardin, got Romero on the wire, and told him to bring me a trunk packed with raincoat, instead of bringing merely my dress clothes. Then I asked him why he had not already telephoned me the news of the Senorita Felipa, as I had ordered.

"I was just going to call you up, senor. I have been trying to see the senorita."

A MOTHER'S PRAISE OF BABY'S OWN TABLETS

Mrs. B. S. Baker, East Margaretville, N. S. writes: "No mother would recommend for her baby any medicine of which she was not absolutely sure. A baby's life is too precious. A mother is always pleased to recommend to other mothers, something that has been valuable in restoring the health of her own child. That is why I can highly recommend Baby's Own Tablets. They cured my baby who was suffering from constipation and I feel that I cannot praise them enough. I would advise all mothers with sickly babies to give them a trial, well knowing what the result will be." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

REDHOT CONTEST IN QUAKER CITY

Philadelphia, Nov. 4—The local municipal campaign which will end with the election next Tuesday has been in keeping with Philadelphia's reputation for red-hot political contests. National interest centres around Senator Boies Penrose, who is fighting to retain Republican control of the city. His candidate for mayor on the Republican ticket is George H. Earle, Jr., who was nominated in the primaries after a bitter contest in which a strong faction fought for Edward E. Ware and against Earle. Opposing Earle is Rudolph Blakenburg, who is the nominee of the Democrats and the Keystone party. Blakenburg is known as the "reform war horse" of the Quaker City. He has led many campaigns against the Republican organization and though generally defeated has continued to fight. Whether he can win the mayoralty at this time is a question which the best informed Philadelphians do not attempt to answer.

CANADIAN NORTHERN

NATIONAL ISSUES IN BAY STATE

Boston, Mass., Nov. 4—Of the various State elections to be held next Tuesday it is generally conceded that the contest in Massachusetts is more involved than any other national campaign of next year. Eugene N. Foss, whose success contributed the straw which pointed the way to Democratic control of the lower branch of Congress when he was elected to fill a vacancy from a Republican district some months before the landslide in 1910 and who subsequently left his seat in Congress to become the Democratic governor of Massachusetts, is a candidate for re-election. The Republican candidate is Louis A. Frothingham, the present lieutenant governor, and a man who for years has been popular among the people. National issues have been injected into the campaign on both sides. The Republicans under the leadership of Senator Lodge have been making a mildly progressive campaign. The Democrats are combating the Taft tariff votes, and whichever way the election results the victorious party is certain to make the most of it for moral effect on the country, preliminary to the presidential race.

A bottle of prevention is better than a deranged stomach.

LISTEN TO US

"We are only little ones, but we know Zam-Buk eased our pain and cured our sores. Perhaps it would cure you, too, if you tried it?"

Isn't this sound advice from "babes and sucklings?" Take it! The speakers are the children of Mrs. L. Webster, of Seymour St., Montreal, and the mother adds weight to their appeal. She says: "My little girl contracted scalp disease at school. Bad ga herings formed all over her head, and not only caused the child acute pain but made her very ill. The sores discharged, and occurring on the scalp we feared she would lose all her hair. She was in a pitiable plight when we tried Zam-Buk, but a few days' treatment with this balm gave her ease. Then the sores began to heal, and we continued the Zam-Buk treatment. In a short time she was quite healed.

"My little boy sustained a serious scald on the neck. It set up a bad sore, and quite a few things we tried failed to heal it or give him ease. Once more we turned to Zam-Buk, and we were not disappointed. It acted like a charm in drawing away the pain, and soon healed the wound."

Zam-Buk is "something different" in the way of balms. It contains powerful healing herbal essences, which, as soon as applied to skin diseases, kill off the germs and end the painful smarting. Other essences contained there so stimulate the cells that new healthy tissue is speedily formed. Eczema, itch, ulcers, cold sores, abscesses, festering sores, blood poisoning, chronic wounds, cold cracks, etc., are healed and cured in this way. Use it for all skin injuries and diseases. It is also of great service for piles. All druggists and stores at 50 cents box, or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.
