HON. MR. LEMIEUX'S GRACEFUL SPEECH

Delivered at the Banquet of the Manufacturer's Association---A Tribute to Sir John Macdonald---Hope to See Twenty-Five Million People in Canada at the End of Twenty Years.

Following is a summary of the able and eloquent speech delivered by Hon. Rodolph Lemieux, Postmaster General, at the banquet of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association at Montreal last week:

It was good Hon. Mr. Lemieux said to be so warmly welcomed in his native land on his return from a long and arduous journey such as he had just completed. He referred to his comparatively short experience in public life and said that he had always been on the best of terms with the Canadian Manufacturers and hoped that their relations would continue to be friendly so long as he was in the public eye. He referred also in a touching and sympathetic manner to the fact that his father was present at the banquet and remarked that he felt he must take off his hat to the men who distributed in the Dominion of Canada some two hundred and forty millions of dollars yearly.

TRIBUTE TO SIR JOHN

Confederation, continued the speaker, was an accomplished fact and had been an accomplished fact for some forty-seven years, but while remaining a sound Liberal, he must admit and confess that if Confederation was an accomplished fact, and the prosperity of the Dominion also an accomplished fact, then Canadians owed it to the great Sir John Macdonald. This chivalrous tribute to the great Conservative leader was greeted with cheers.

Canada today Mr. Lemieux continued, was a young and powerful giant, beginning to stretch itself in its first strength, dazzling by its prosperity the nations of the world, with a constitutional fabric which was the model for all the other constitutional governments of the world, and the pattern of which was being followed by all the countries of the Empire.

It has abolished racial feud among its oldest settlers and having a choice among the other nations of the earth was able to select from the other nations those strong and good elements which would in the best manner help it to build up a strong and vigorous new nation.

SEES BIG NATION

Declaring that he was not yet an old man, celebrating his forty-fourth anniversary, this year, Mr. Lemieux said that in the next twenty years he hoped and expected to see Canada a nation not of ten or fifteen million people but a nation of twenty-five millions.

Thanks to a wise fiscal policy Canada had risen in twenty years to a position of commanding supremacy in the markets of the world. To such a degree was this evident that although neglected previously by the United States, the latter country now evinced a desire to coquette with this country in trade matters, with what result he could not say.

WILL PROTECT CANADA

He could say, however, that when the result of the negotiations was made public none of the Canadian interests would suffer in the slightest degree. This he thought represented the feelings of the country at large. The people would accept the word of the Prime Minister and his colleagues Messrs. Fielding and Patterson, who were engaged in the negotiations, and whatever might be the result, Canadians would have ample cause to be satisfied with it.

Referring to the railway system of the country, Mr. Lemieux pointed out that the railroads existed to bind the east to the west and not the north to the south of Canada to the United States. He believed in maintaining the best possible relations with our neighbors but he was for Canada first last and always.

The Hudson Bay Railway, at the time of Confederation, a mere dream, was today to all intents and purposes an accomplished fact. Both parties were agreed that the railway must be built not only for the good of the West, or for the east or for any one section of the country, but for the country as a whole. The same thing was true of the Georgian Bay canal and he hoped that within a few months that should also be an accomplished fact.

GEORGIAN BAY CANAL

We were living today, the speaker continued, in a time and in a country where the writing of history was not a matter of centuries. The Georgian Bay canal would provide an outlet which it was necessary that the country should have and both the great political parties were agreed as to this. Yet with it all history was being merely repealed. The pioneers of the Hudson Bay country had dreamed of a Hudson Bay Railway which would be built. Where there was previously one lone ship plying in the navigable waters around the Hudson Bay there would be a whole fleet of ships carrying Canadian merchandise through its waters, now proved thoroughly navigable, finally by the trip made by the Governor-General last year. The Georgian Bay canal was no doubt dreamed of by Champlain since he had followed the proposed route from end to end. So the present day creators were merely repeating history of which the early pioneers had dreamed.

UNITED IN PEACE

Canada today, Mr. Lemieux continued, passing on to another phase of his subject, was in the proud position of being an elder brother to the other nations in the British Empire, and she was looked up to as such by the other nations--by New Zealand, by Australia and by the newly-created Union of South Africa. The consummation of the Union of South Africa he described as the latest miracle of British diplomacy. Only ten years ago South Africa veiled had been soaked in blood, and war with all its horrors had raged. In the course of that desperate struggle General Methuen had been taken prisoner by General Delarey. Yet only a few months since he had seen on the occasion of the foundation of the new nation within the Empire, the Union of South Africa, General Methuen and General Delarey at the foot of the throne, side by side, in friendly intercourse, the one an honored senator of South Africa, the other as commandant of his Britannic Majesty's forces in the country.

Peace with honor had come to South Africa, and the white races were already uniting to make that country a new nation, the Dutch full of ardent loyalty to the throne of Great Britain, and the English with all the traditional Englishmen's respect for a brave and honored foe. What is happening in South Africa today had happened in Canada fifty or sixty years ago, and Lord Dunham's mission to this country at that time had been practically the same as that of Sir Francis Hopwood in South Africa recently. The speaker drew a parallel between Dr. Jamieson and Gen. Botha in South Africa and Lafontaine and Baldwin in this country, declaring that in each case the statesman had practically the same ideas of government.

NO RACIAL TROUBLES

The reports that racial prejudices were rampant in South Africa was only a story. It would be with South Africa as it had been with Canada. When great problems were to be faced, the two races would unite for the common good of the new nation. Moreover the difficulties which faced South Africa were not as great as had faced Canada at the time of the first independence. The language differences were not so great, and there were not the same religious differences to cope with as had been the case here.

The biggest problem which faced South Africa was the combined one of the native population and the Asiatic immigration, and in the face of this danger all racial prejudices the speaking prophesied would be wiped out and the two great constitutional parties assert themselves, as had been the case in the Dominion.

A GLORIOUS EMPIRE

What is the British Empire, Mr. Lemieux asked. It is an Empire with no bonds of allegiance beyond the one great common spirit of liberty and freedom which is only enjoyed to its fullest extent under the British flag.

"Repeat my words in the poorest hamlet and in the humblest home in all this great province of Quebec," Mr. Lemieux concluded fervently. "I am glad and proud to live under the British flag. Where is there another nation that could hold the sway as Great Britain has in South Africa. Where is the nation that could hold the hordes of India in the hollow of its hand as Great Britain has done for more than a century."

"It is the greatest Empire that has ever existed, the only Empire worth living for, worth defending and worth dying for. Its great flag flies under the north star and under the southern cross. It is a great privilege to be a Canadian, for Canada is the eldest brother amongst the overseas Dominions of this glorious Empire."

Cleveland's new $3,000,000 Post-Office was opened to the public on the 7th inst., under the happiest auspices.

CORSET COAT FOR MEN IS THE LATEST FAD

St. Louis, Mo., Jan. 24.--The Corset Coat is a fashionable spring and summer garment for men this year. The smart man's trousers will fit his legs so snugly it will be necessary for him to remove his shoes in order to change them.

Coats effect, and "pencil stripes" in grey, brown and blues will be the predominating figures and colors grey mixtures will lead in popular favor with rich brown a close second. Blues will be in fashion but all other colors can be placed as belonging to those dressers who seek individuality in their garments. Shoulders will be narrow, the chest full and the waist narrow giving the effect of a corset. The sleeves will be narrow. Coats will be single breasted, boldly rounded at the bottom. The cut away in many respects will resemble the frock coat now in style.

The vests will be regulated to the side lines. Two piece suits are to be the height of fashion.

EX-ALD. EDWARD MOORE
Vice-President of reorganized John Palmer Co., Ltd.

PRINCE OF WALES TO ENTER OXFORD

At the conclusion of the Easter term in April next the Prince of Wales will have completed his studies at the Royal Naval College at Dartmouth.

He entered the college on May 26, 1909, and will thus have gone through a fairly exacting course extending over nearly two years.

According to present arrangements, the Prince's training is outlined up to his second-seond year as follows: 1909-1911, At the Royal Naval College.

1911-1913, At Oxford (probably Christ Church.)

1913-1914, On a tour round the Empire.

1914-1916, In a cavalry regiment, with intervals for study with the Royal Engineers and Royal Artillery.

Immediately after leaving Dartmouth his Royal Highness will commence his studies for a short university career, and will most likely go into residence at the beginning of the Michaelmas term on October 10.

The usual four years' course at the University will be curtailed in his Royal Highness's case to two years, and he will be attended by his present tutor--Mr. Hansell--assisted by several professors, according to the subjects of study chosen.

Some time in 1913, probably towards the end of the year, the Prince of Wales will embark with his brother, Prince Albert, in one of the big warships of the Dreadnought cruiser type for a tour round the Empire.

On their return the Prince of Wales according to precedent, will be gazetted to a cavalry regiment, while Prince Albert will become a midshipman, most likely in the flagship of the Home Fleet.

The great wish of the Queen is that the Prince of Wales may remain a boy as long as possible. Consequently he is not to be allowed to undertake any public duties until after he has attained the age of eighteen--when royalty legally comes of age in England.

Though his Royal Highness will be present at the State opening of Parliament next month by the King, his role will be that merely of a spectator, and he will take no official part in the proceedings.

It may be added that the plans for the education of his Royal Highness, as outlined above, were originally laid down by the late King Edward.
