

THE Famous
Rayo
Lamp

The Ideal Reading Lamp

Opticians agree that the light from a good oil lamp is easier on the eyes than any other artificial light.

The Rayo Lamp is the best oil lamp made.

It gives a strong, yet soft, white light; and it never flickers. It preserves the eyesight of the young; it helps and quickens that of the old.

You can pay $5, $10, or $20 for other lamps, but you cannot get better light than the low-priced Rayo gives.

Made of solid brass, nickel-plated. Easily lighted, without removing shade or chimney. Easy to clean and rewick.

THE DOUBLE CROSS

With that he threw open the double doors leading into the drawing-room—and I beheld a great number of persons, all seated and facing an improvised altar. As I passed up the aisle through the centre of the assemblage, I noted many whom I knew from La Luz and Guanajuato. There were the del Travenos and all the others that had figured in my adventures "up country," including even my judge, de la Torre, and Meldrum and many officers of the Black Cavalry.

In front of the altar, and facing us, stood Padre Aurelio.

Near the padre, a little to the side of the altar, stood Don Justino, and by him, my beloved Felipa and Alva.

As I advanced, with the President walking beside me, Don Justino bowed, Felipa smiled and Alva viewed me with grave, sad eyes.

I seemed to be doing all this in a dream. Felipa, in her beautiful bridal gown and veil, seemed to be a dream woman.

And when Padre Aurelio said, "Who giveth this woman?" Don Justino, in all his pride and dignity, stepped forward, holding Felipa's hand, and put that hand in mine.

Felipa at the same time handed to Alva the bridal bouquet of roses.

Then, as Padre Aurelio continued the ceremony of uniting us, Alva stood where she could see directly into my face.

And what terrible thing was that I saw in her eyes now—again—that terrible thing that I had seen the night when she said,

"No, on the mouth."

At last Padre Aurelio threw over our heads—Felipa's and mine—a golden chain, signifying our eternal union.

The ceremony was at an end. The girl of the convent school, the woman of the steamer and the woman of the Catacombs, was now mine, all mine.

As we turned from the altar, I took Felipa in my arms, kissed her, and she whispered these mystifying words:

"John, my John. You have married—God forgive me and help me!—the sign of the cross!"

CHAPTER LIX.

THE MYSTERY OF THE BIRTH.

"Why should God forgive you that?" I whispered. "I know you bore the sign of the cross. For I saw the cross. Felipa dear, one night when—you did not know."

Now came the guests' offering of congratulations, and how merry everybody was! When all had paid their compliments to Felipa and me, the President himself stepped up, saying:

"Come now. We must sign the documents prescribed by law to make your union legal."

A few minutes later we entered the reception room—Felipa and Alva, Don

Justino and the President and myself—where we found the Senor Reyes the minister of justice who had shown me my father's will, awaiting us. I knew now, of course, that the "trustee" whom he had represented at the reading of the will, was none other than the President himself.

Reyes at once asked us to sign the certificate of marriage. After affixing my own signature, I handed the pen to Felipa. She, after a moment's hesitation, during which she looked appealingly at Alva, as if for encouragement, signed merely:

"Senorita de Gasteneda."

My astonishment was so great at the seeming incompleteness of the signature, that I cried:

"But your front name, Felipa! What about your baptismal?"

"The signature is sufficient," Senor Reyes put in, hurriedly.

At the same time he took the pen from Felipa.

"And now," he added, "the first witness please."

And he handed the pen to the President, who quickly scrawled his remarkable-looking autograph.

"And the second witness, please," Reyes said, as the President put the pen in Alva's hand.

Unlike Felipa, Alva hesitated not at all in signing merely:

"Senorita de Gasteneda."

"De Gasteneda?" I cried, forgetting for the moment the wondrous revelation that Alva was the daughter of Don Justino.

"Oh, yes," I went on, recollecting the situation, "you, Alva, are—why, you and Felipa are—"

"Sisters," she said, smiling happily and going to Felipa and embracing her and murmuring again and again:

"My sister! Dear sister!"

"But your Christian name, Alva," making protest as I had at the time Felipa signed. "Why do you not sign your—?"

But Reyes, just as in Felipa's case, again interposed, saying:

"The signature is sufficient."

Then, too, the President asked us all to come at once into the library.

"My secretary is there," he said to me, "with certain papers to interest you."

When we were all assembled in the library, the President's secretary closed the connecting doors, thus shutting out the hum of conversation in the adjoining drawing-room. The President sat at a desk, opened a document with a red seal—a document I had seen before.

"This," he said, looking directly at me, "is your father's will. You have proved yourself a man of courage. Senor St. John, in marrying the woman of your choice, instead of—the fact is, senor, you have nobly sacrificed the money for the woman, not the woman for the money."

SIXTY-THREE YEARS ON THE THRONE

Vienna, Dec. 2.—Special services of thanksgiving were held throughout the empire today in celebration of the sixty-third anniversary of the accession of Emperor Francis Joseph. Greetings from many parts of the world were received by the venerable emperor, who passed the day in accordance with the simple routine that has marked his life for many years. The health of his Majesty is reported to be satisfactory, though the fact that he is feeling the weight of his years and can no longer indulge in the hunting expeditions and other recreations that served to lighten the burden of his domestic sorrows can no longer be denied. He appears very rarely in public nowadays and during the past year he has frequently been confined to his apartments for days at a time.
