HIGHER EDUCATION FOR WOMEN

This is the question that has been suggested by some remarks made in the course of a speech by a gifted and inspiring Duchess who, besides being warmly interested in the higher education of women, is a staunch supporter of women's colleges and greatly in favor of feminine college life.

There are many ardent believers in the higher education of girls and women, whether it be undertaken as a means to an end—that of teaching, or of entering some profession—or simply for a woman's delight in the pursuit of learning. The question whether such learning makes women more acceptable as wives is quite another consideration. The Duchess, in her able speech, alluded to the splendid type of college bred women produced by America, and declared, that men of that country had not found that college-bred girls made less devoted wives and mothers.

Somehow among Englishmen—at any rate a large class of them—there is a prejudice against what they are pleased to consider over-education in women. Learned women and very clever women do not attract them; on the contrary, they are frequently fought shy of, and if a man happens to fall in love with a woman of that particular type, he does so in spite of her learning and cleverness not because of it. Now why? What is at the root of their objections? Are they jealous? Is there latent fear lest hard as they now find it to understand a woman, she would be absolutely beyond their comprehension were she highly educated? All these ideas have been expressed. We may smile at them but they contain germs of truth.

It must be admitted that men and women take learning very differently. In this respect men have the advantage of us. Girls who are inclined to be bookish, women who are regular dragons at mathematics, fair ladies who are never so happy as when swimming in seas of science, take themselves so dreadfully seriously. They don't seem to carry their learning as easily as men do. They can't forget it. It oozes out of them in season, and out of season. Nothing bores a man so much as the pedantic woman.

A great statesman has been given it as his opinion that education, in spite of its value is apt to stifle originality and individuality. This was said of mankind in general. It certainly applies to womanhood. Too much knowledge poured into the receptive girlish mind may rob it of that delightful freshness and simplicity which is found so charming by the opposite sex. What is worse, it may even endanger the existence of a certain exclusively feminine gift which is best described by the word intuition.

Women cannot have it all ways. So long as learning satisfies both heart and mind, by all means allow them—nay, more, encourage them—to pursue it. Should they marry all will be well if only a little tact be exercised. As the Duchess herself said there are many occasions when the highly educated wife will show her wisdom by keeping any superabundance of knowledge "up her sleeve."

Try rolling out pie crust on oiled paper, it works admirably. A tender crust can be lifted on the paper and slipped into the tin without breaking. Pull off the paper carefully and trim the crust around the sides afterward.

According to a grandmother's advice, keep fruit cakes and puddings in a stone jar with an apple. The apple shrivels without decaying, imparting its dampness to the cakes. By renewing the fruit when necessary such cake can be kept in proper condition a long time.

MILITARY EVOLUTIONS BY AEROPLANE

Pau, France, March 3.—The first aerial military evolutions ever witnessed, culminating in a serious charge of a squad of blériot monoplanes, took place here today. Captain Bleanger led the detachment of flyers. His followers were Lt. Derosé de Malherbe and Prince Tau and Naval Ensign Canneau. The five machines left their hangers soon after with Captain Belanger in the van. They immediately alighted in military formation, executed several difficult evolutions in perfect time and with apparent ease, and then with the word of command, started off on a charge to Chateau Roix, where it was planned to make the only stop on a dash to Paris. The aviators expect to arrive in Paris early tomorrow.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Giltson of St. John, spent the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Clarke.

PUNCTUATION COUNTS.

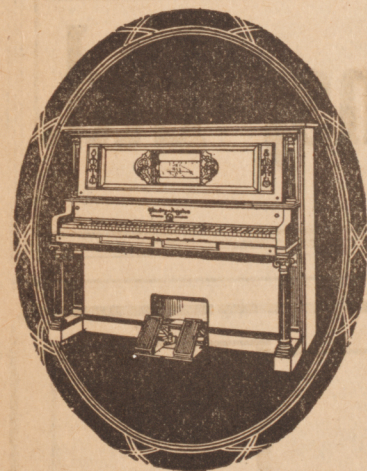

Punctuation marks are small things but they make meaning plain when properly used, as appears from the following: "The old gentleman then entered the drawing room on his head a white hat on his feet, finely polished boots on his nose, gold-rimmed spectacles in his hand, a silver-headed cane was carried in the manner of a sword."

This is ridiculous, but may be made sensible by slight changes in the punctuation as follows:

A delicious dressing for the simple lettuce salad is made of the yolk of an egg beaten up with lemon juice and seasoned with chives and a liberal amount of salt and paprika.

"The old gentleman then entered the drawing room, on his head a white hat, on his feet finely polished boots, in his nose gold-rimmed spectacles, in his hand a silver-headed cane was carried in the manner of a sword."
