After a daily practice at Pennsylvania a basket ball game is played, the play lasting for twenty minutes. The Harvard schedule calls for all the games to be played in Cambridge with the exception of the game with Princeton.

THE DOUBLE CROSS

"One more thing, senorita," Joaquin said. "Annesley asks if you will mind if the stranger comes incognito and masked—as the Senor Estranjero." (Stranger.)

"Not at all," Felipa said. "Masked or unmasked, he will be welcome, since Larry Annesley vouches for him."

I smiled. Annesley vouching for the stranger! What an actress she was! I admired her histrionic talent immensely.

"The stranger," Ruiz said, "has had a big touring car sent up from Mexico City—in addition to his racing car—and he and Annesley will use it to come out here tonight."

Ruiz then rode away. It was four o'clock. A few minutes later, while Felipa and I were still sitting in the arbor, Royal appeared in the door of the room of the pow-wow, smoking a cigar, and I called to him across the garden, asking him if he were ready for the second conference.

He looked up at the sun—the cowboy's clock.

"It's only second—drink time, son," he called back. "Howsoever, I'll try to stampee the herd."

And once more I wondered what his real object could be in delaying.

It was after five when at last we eleven men gathered again in the Don's private office and were again seated in the same places as at the morning conference—ready at last to complete the business of selling the mine.

"Senor Don," Royal began, speaking in his new role of one trying to be as polite as the Mexicans themselves, "I just want a say that you and me both know the value of this mine. We all know it is worth a bigger price than you-all have asked. The company which I represent wants this mine; but it was good business to try to get a knock down out of you, now weren't it, Senor Don?"

"Quite," responded the Don, tersely. "Well then," Royal said, "there ain't nothin' left but to swap our money for—your title deeds."

"They are yours, Colonel," And the Don, for the second time that day, handed Royal the documents, saying:

"We will affix our signatures when you are ready."

Ten minutes passed in the signing. "The next deal is on, gents," now said Royal. "As you gents knows, seein' that my advance agent here, (the which is St. John), has already told you—I'm called 'Spot Cash' Royal."

The nerve! His "advance agent!" But I made no protest.

Royal and Terry each took a number of bulky packages from their pockets. Royal opened the packages and displayed ten heaps of crisp, new yellowbacks—United States currency. Then, in a ludicrous imitation of the Don's grand manner, he pushed the money towards the Don, saying:

"It is yours."

"I reckon," he added, "that Uncle Sam's thousand dollar bills go in this here camp."

The Don here looked at his banker, le Treveno, who nodded his head.

"Well and frisky," continued Royal. "Here are one thousand United States bank bills—each a thousand-dollar note—the same bein' equivalent to one million dollars gold."

Whereupon all those on the Don's side of the table, (his entire "cabinets") sprang to their feet as if they had received an electric shock, each expressing either amazement or utter incredulity.

"And you gents witness," Royal trumpeted, "that I now pay for the Farthermost—spot cash."

A million dollars in cash! I thrilled with elation. Fifty of those thousand-dollar bank bills were mine.

"Impossible, Colonel," said the Don's attorney, Ignacio de la Torre.

"It is much money for one to risk on one's person," exclaimed del Treveno, the banker.

"Not for your Uncle Royal it ain't gents," bragged the Colonel.

"Nevertheless," insisted de la Torre, "it is impossible."

"Not 'tall," replied Royal. "Mines is not portable property. And it's too late in the day to go to Guanajuato with those notes to put 'em in a bank—or to cash 'em for gold. So all that remains is for me to pocket these here title deeds."

And with the words he did so.

"And for the Don here," he added, "to take my money and put it in his vault o'er night."

"No, no, Colonel, it is impossible" again protested de la Torre. "You may yourself keep the money over night and we will keep the deeds."

"But look here, gents," Royal blandly answered, "I can't stay on this reservation all night. I've got to vamoos to Mexico City on tonight's train in order to be there in the morning on important round-ups. Do you-all savvy a whole lot?"

During the last minute or two, Don Justino had been in consultation with his banker, del Treveno. Now the Don said:

"Colonel, permit me to be the first to congratulate you upon being the new owner of one of the richest mines in Mexico. As you say, mines are not portable; they will remain right here until we have banked your notes and cashed them for gold. The deeds, meantime, will be quite as safe in your keeping as in mine. And I trust the money will be quite as safe in my keeping as it seems to have been in yours. The meeting, senores, is adjourned."

All filed out of the room excepting Don Justino, del Treveno and myself.

"It would be well," said the banker, after consulting the notes and making memorandum of each particular one of their numbers, "to put this money at once in your vault, Senor Don."

Even while del Treveno spoke, the Don opened the great steel door of the vault and entered with the notes in his hands.

Del Treveno and I watched him as he opened another and much smaller steel door—that of a strong box, or safe, let into the wall. Into this receptacle he placed the money.

Two minutes later the Don and I stood alone in his office.

"Don Justino," I said, "I have a favor to ask of you. It will appear to you almost childish."

"My son," he answered, "your five per cent. is yours. You have earned it. I never dreamed that Colonel Royal would pay so high a price. I thought it prohibitive, and am much surprised that he pays it. I assure you that I asked for a million solely because of the information you gave me that Royal would pay any price. Moreover, my daughter has told me of your controversy today with the Colonel, when you showed your loyalty to me. You say now that you have a favor to ask. I grant it in advance. What is it?"

"Thank you, Don Justino. It is—that you give me my five per cent. now, this minute. I should like to know the feel of this money—the first I have ever earned—in my very pocket, just till tomorrow morning when we can go together to the bank in Guanajuato."

Five minutes later I stepped out into the patio with fifty thousand dollars in my pocket—fifty crisp one-thousand-dollar United States bank notes.

The Don stepped out with me, and we found Royal and his three henchmen of business ready mounted and about to take their departure.

"No Royal, the Don said: "When shall it please you, Colonel, to take possession of your mine?"

"Oh, no stampedin' is necessary," Royal answered. "You will want time, Don, to cash in on those bank notes, of course. S'long!"

Royal walked his horse to the portal where Terry and Thatcher and Richardson were already in the saddle, awaiting their chief.

FASHIONS FOR THE LADIES

Skirts are a shade fuller and coats are a trifle longer in concession to the approaching cold season—this is all that any one, except those in the inner circle of sartorial affairs knows of the fall fashions. Big collars are with us yet, though the knife of the dressmaking assassin may behead them come next month. But the collars are round now because corners were far from new and some change must be made, even only in corner is obliterated. The suit in the drawing is made of double faced serge in a dark blue with braid trimmings. The coat is a one-button cut-away with lapels and large round collar.

Sleeve elaborations are increasing. The flower puff sleeve has been seen all summer and is promising to return this fall. And there is another sleeve bidding for favor—a sort of play on the Marie de Medici model. This is an upper sleeve which ends at the elbow in a hoop of wire with a lace puff below it which is banded around the waist.

NORTH DAKOTA RATE CASES

St. Paul, Minn., Oct. 2—Master in Chancery R. D. Hoskins today began the hearing in the revived North Dakota coal-rate cases. The cases involve lignite coal rates in North Dakota. In the previous litigation the United States supreme court decided adversely to the railroads, but at the same time ruled that the cases might be reopened if the rates should be found confiscatory. The present hearing results from an application of the Soo road, which asked for a reopening of the case.

MISS MORGAN

Give your servants GOLD DUST to clean with, treat them rightly and you will have few occasions to insert a "help wanted" ad

They say a good workman is known by his tools. You cannot expect your maid to keep everything ship-shape unless you give her every modern help. To keep house without GOLD DUST is to do work by hard, old-fashioned methods. For cleaning everything and anything about the house—from cellar to attic—GOLD DUST is worth its weight in gold. It cuts grease and dirt like magic, does away with scouring and scrubbing, and saves time and tempers.

Your servant can do more and better work and keep sweet with the aid of GOLD DUST in all household cleaning.

WILL BUILD ROAD IN ONE DAY

Chickasha, Okla., Sept. 30—At sunrise Monday morning the entire male population of Grady County will turn out en masse and with the aid of several hundred teams will start work on the construction of an improved highway along the route of the Chickaholm trail, a distance of nearly 100 miles. It is proposed to complete the building of the entire road in one day.

TAFT IN NEBRASKA CAPITAL

Lincoln, Neb., Oct. 2—A reception committee headed by former Senator Burkett met President Taft upon his arrival here from Omaha this morning and escorted him to the Lincoln Hotel, where the distinguished visitor was entertained at dinner by the Omaha Commercial Club. Following the dinner the President delivered a speech at the Auditorium. Governor Aldrich presided at the meeting.
