Dr. Kerr was ing a startling educational condition of the Royal University of Dublin erally, which was revealed at the hearing at McGill University last night. It was shown that in consequence of the lower schools defeacts in English and drawing and their absolute lack of manual training and physical culture, McGill was obliged to teach elementary subjects. Students came to McGill with very little knowledge of English or English composition, that first year drawing had to be taught in the Science Department and that students arrived at the college knowing practically nothing of other elementary subjects.
