"WE DIE TOO YOUNG" SAYS AGED EDUCATOR

Los Angeles, Cal., July 29—Members of the human race should 'live 150 years. This is the way the longevity problem is figured by Professor Maria L. Sanford, for thirty years connected with the University of Minnesota. Professor Sanford, who now is seventy-five years old, is retired on a Carnegie pension.

She visited in Los Angeles as the guest of Dr. Rowley and his family following active participation in the sessions of General Federation of Women's Clubs at San Francisco. When she addressed the clubwomen there was an ovation because of her mental brilliancy and physical vigor. "I believe that we are dying too young," she said. "I have heard it said, that among the animals the time of life is five times that required to reach maturity. I cannot see why mankind should not come under this same law of nature. Of course the laws of common sense and moderation would have to be observed. As thirty years are required for a man to reach maturity, then, under natural conditions, he should live to be 150 years old. So you can see our race is dying in what might be termed childhood in comparison to this century and a half."

"Our artificial manners of living probably are deterring factors. My advice is to keep the brain actively employed. That assists in retaining physical energy. 'Kipling's poem 'If' is to me the epitome of life and those who fill the unforgetting minute with sixty seconds' worth of distance run' will find life slips by too quickly for growing old. By helping we help ourselves."

Professor Sanford offers the unusual statement that the difference between the wise man and the fool is dangerously little.

"The line between genius and stupidity is so finely marked that unless there is good common sense and strong physical vitality the balancing power is liable to slip," she said. When the balancing power slips nerves are crossed, and irritation and then friction follow."

Professor Sanford considers the American art is making wonderful strides, and that we are not copying old world ideas, but developing American ideas in art, and will stand as a nation on individual merits in that line. American mural painters, she declares, are in the lead now, and have outdistanced rivals of other countries.

TO KILL A FOWL

The usual and most approved way to kill fowls is by dislocating the neck, says Poultry Farmer. This is done by holding the bird firmly by the legs with the left hand and by the head with the right with the thumb and fingers across the throat. The fowl is then placed across the knees, breast downward with the neck held over the right knee. Then the neck is quickly and firmly extended, and the head bent back suddenly, with some force. By this means the neck should be dislocated just before the junction with the head.

Some people prefer to use the knife as the flesh is whiter. The bird is hung up by the legs which are tied together by a piece of string and then stuck with a sharp small knife in the roof of the mouth, touching the brain.

Another way is to take the bird by the legs, strike it a sharp blow across the back of the head. This causes instant insensibility and death. If hung afterwards by the legs the blood will flow into the head and neck leaving the flesh white.

Before killing the fowls should be kept at least twenty-four hours without food. If this is not done, the food left in the crop turns sour and the whole body quickly decomposes. After the birds are killed the plucking and shaping must be carefully attended to. The plucking should be done while the fowls are warm, as the feathers come out more easily than when the bodies are cold. Chickens that have been especially prepared and fattened are tender and the skin tears more easily.

The slashed skirt is by no means out of fashion; at present it is even with an inside plaiting that gives a line of contrast that is excellent. This plait or satin, and often introduces a contrasting touch of color.

TAFT FORMALLY ACCEPTS NOMINATION

Washington, Aug. 1—President Taft's formal speech of acceptance of the nomination of Chicago convention was delivered here today to the official committee of nomination, headed by Senator Root and a few invited guests.

Although Taft declined to detail the issue of the campaign as he saw them. He reserved the right to amplify his statement as the campaign developed. The supreme issue that confronts the voters, the president declared was that of the maintenance of the nation's institutions and the preservation of the constitution, threatens, he said, on the one hand by the democratic party and on the other by those republicans who had left the party to try their fortunes in the new one. Next in importance, Mr. Taft placed the tariff. The president said it was untrue that to its door could be traced the high cost of living pointed out that conditions of living were alike all over the world. A political promise could not remedy such a condition, he said, as an issue only less important than the tariff, the president placed the regulation of trusts. Taft did not mention either Col. Roosevelt or Governor Wilson by name but referred to each. While he did not accuse either of embracing the doctrines of socialism, many of the proposals they had made, the president said, savored of it strongly.

THE MUSKRAT PLAYS AN IMPORTANT PART

The muskrat plays a vital part in the advance guard of civilization in western and northern Canada.

The rat-lined coat is an elegant and comfortable garment, and fashion has ordained the rat skin (cloth lined) to a piece of special distinction among ladies' furs.

The trapper ordinarily receives twelve and a half cents per hide to fifty cents, according to the quality, the season in which it is caught, the care exercised in skinning and stretching, and, lastly and not least, according to his good judgment in placing in a market which will or will not pay well for the same.

It is a comparatively easy task to skin a muskrat. Fleshing the hide requires great care and considerable time. Willows can be bent into stretchers, but the average trapper now endeavors to stretch his rats on thin boards such as are obtainable from packing cases.

The dried pelts find their way to the tanneries, after which they are cut into backs and fronts by the furriers, who make them up for their trade.

The revenue from muskrat pelts is no inconsiderable amount. Count the pelts in your coat, reckon them at thirty-five cents each, which is a good average, and you know approximately what the trapper made. The tanner's charge is comparatively small, probably about ten cents per skin. But by the time the finished garment reaches the wearer, due allowance being made for workmanship he will likely conclude that someone is still making a good thing of the muskrat trade.

And yet all has not been said in regard to the muskrat. He belongs to the groundhog family, and, judging from the usual contents of his stomach—grass and herbs—appears to be a vegetarian. Not infrequently he comes incognito as black squirrel or the bill of fare of fashionable resorts.

But in the west (where a man can not pack a butcher shop hundred miles) when there is nothing else to eat he's just plain rat, and there are days when rain and wind drive ducks, chickens, rabbits and most small game out of sight. At such times, were it not for the tireless muskrat who fords streams, rain or shine, swims, carries mud to build winter houses for his rapidly multiplying connections, many an Indian, half-breed and white trapper would go hungry.

In fact there are few fur-traders, prospectors, or early pioneers who have not from curiosity or necessity eaten muskrat roasted before the camp fire. If the musk bag is removed intact while the animal is still warm the meat is wonderfully good if one is sufficiently hungry; and there is no doubt but that hundreds of people trekking the northwest have avoided hunger and even starvation by making a meal on a roasted muskrat or muskrat sirloin.
