MAINE CAR

At last after nearly three hours hard work they succeeded in getting their car out of its precarious position. Some time ago a horse and wagon went through the same bridge but nothing was done afterward toward rebuilding the bridge.

Mr. McLellan will conduct the service at the house. Interment will be made at the Baptist cemetery, Marysville.

A GRRED SUCCESS

The Strawberry Festival in the Forrester's Hall at Burr's Corner last evening was a grand success in every particular. A large number of people were present who enjoyed the affair immensely. Burr's Corner Band furnished music during the evening which added wonderfully to the success and enjoyment of the occasion.

DAMAGING EVIDENCE

money to get the contract?

A.—I confidently believed so.

Q.—Why?

A.—After what happened to us on the first contract. We got it but it was taken away from us and we did not want that to happen again. We did not pay anything for that contract.

In reply to further questions, the witness said that the contract did not turn out as they had expected, and instead of receiving about $112,000 as they had expected from the estimates, they got only $50,000.

The estimates came to them through the Hibbard Company but they were prepared by the engineers of the Q. & St. J. Construction Co. On one occasion the estimate prepared by the resident engineer was changed in the head office, cutting down their pay by about $1,000. The estimate was sent in showing 1,770 yards of solid rock and 13,833 yards of other material. It came back showing only 1,034 yards of rock and 14,712 yards of other material.

Mr. Carter asked that the witness be allowed to stand aside until after lunch so that he might consult his client about this and this was agreed to.

C. FRED CHESTNUT.

C. Fred Chestnut of Fredericton, was then called. He said that he holds stock in the St. John and Quebec Railway Company to the par value of $5,000. He paid nothing for the stock but it was assigned to him by H. E. MacDonell, who told him that it was paid up and non-assessable. He did not know if Mr. MacDonnell paid anything for it.

Mr. Chestnut, continuing, said that meetings were held in Fredericton, but not regularly. He is a director, but he did not know who was the treasurer. He had never seen any cash books or ledgers of the company or made any effort to see them; he did not know whether there were such books, but supposed so. Meeting of the directors had been held since the charges were made but he had heard no mention made of the books.

Mr. Carvell—Well, I am going to ask the commission to direct you to have those books brought here.

The witness said that the directors did not handle any money, that he had never seen any of it, that he understood that all the money went to the Prudential Trust Company and that they paid it over to the construction company.

The court took recess for lunch.

MEXICO'S FAMOUS ROMANTIC SEAPORT

Tampico the Noted Harbor Has Many Prosperous Industries

Until the trouble arose between the United States and Mexico, the average person probably knew little about Tampico. Nevertheless, it is a town which provides one of the most remarkable of modern romances of industrial investment.

Tampico became famous in the money market at the beginning of the great oil boom, and some idea of its importance in connection with that industry may be gathered from the fact that in about ten years nearly two hundred and fifty million dollars have been invested in the oilfields in the State of Tamaulipas to which Tampico belongs.

Of this total over $75,000,000 represents British interests, and the amazing growth of oil properties in the corner of the world is illustrated by the fact that from the 1,000,000 barrels of oil secured in 1907, the figure has grown to 16,000,000, which was last year's total.

Apart from oil, however, Tampico, which shares with Vera Cruz the greater portion of the foreign trade of Mexico, has quite a number of other prosperous industries, which have been greatly developed of late years by British and American residents, who are more numerous in Tampico than in any other part of Mexico. The excellent harbor affords accommodation of the town makes it the chief port for the exportation of coffee, sugar, rubber, copper ores, and asphalt, the most important products of the neighboring territory.

The soil is very rich, and it is expected that within a few years there will be an enormous increase in the flourishing trade in fruit and vegetables. Furthermore, it is a fine centre for sea fishing. Indeed, it is the happy hunting-ground of the enthusiasts who delight to catch the big game of the sea, for in no other water can that giant fish, the tarpon, which attains a length of 6 feet or 7 feet be found in such large numbers.

Most of the commerce of Vera Cruz is also in the hands of foreigners, although it is a place to be avoided by those who have a regard for their health. Its moist, hot climate is notoriously unhealthy, and the annual death-rate ranges from one in eleven to one in twenty of the population mostly from lung diseases and from yellow and other fevers. The full title of the city is Villa Nueva de la Vera Cruz, or "New City of the True Cross."

The Resignation of the Blind

How is it, asks a writer in "Cornhill's Magazine," that the blind as a whole look and appear to be happy? It is for the reason that their affliction is so entirely hopeless, so utterly absolute in its deprivation, that it compels them to see the uselessness of rebelling against the inevitable. It is the knowledge that moroseness and impatience will only aggravate their misery; it is the fight with themselves, once mastered, that causes them to see the matter in the right light. When that is accomplished a new life is opened up to them, a fresh start is made—as it has to be—the outlook becomes brighter and everything has to be relearned, so that they may gain their ends without the use of vision. This is that gives them occupation and brings contentment, but do not imagine that, however they may look or appear, they forget for one minute their affliction or their longing and desire to see. That is ever present, and their life is merely patient endurance, with the desire to prove as little burden as possible to their more fortunate fellows.

Prolific Cattle Tick

A male and a female tick hatched in April may by Oct. 15 give rise to 6,750,000,000 descendants, about half of which, being females, will lay about 1,500 more eggs apiece immediately or the following spring.

Take the cattleman's point of view. A thoroughly, although not exceptionally infested cow may carry seven hundred thousand ticks at one time and, during one season, may be infested by four such broods. Now, 1,500 ticks, after having engorged themselves for three or four days, will weigh about a pound, this representing almost entirely the weight of the blood taken from the host. Thus the helpless beast may actually lose from 200 to 500 pounds of blood in a single season.

Little wonder that thousands of Southern calves never reach maturity; that the pitiful spectacle of valuable dairy or beef animals actually starving to death in the midst of rich, nutritious pasture is not a nightmare, but a terribly frequent reality.—World's Work.
