ENGLAND'S KING AS A BUSINESS MAN

His Majesty a Methodical and Industrious Worker

The King has impressed everybody at St. James' Palace both by his industry and the businesslike way in which he gets through his work. The amount of correspondence which his Majesty most personally deal with tends ever to increase, and though Lord Stamfordham relieves the King of as much work as possible, there remains after the most exhaustive sifting sufficient to keep the monarch occupied for several hours a day. It is possible that the King, if he liked, could deputize most of his work, but like his father, the late King Edward he takes the perfectly correct view that it would be injudicious to put his name or give his assent to any document or plan which he had not himself carefully studied. Besides, to one of his Majesty's clearly defined views, tacit agreement on some matters would be highly repugnant. The "Wake-up-England" King believes in looking into things himself.

His Majesty is an early riser. Generally breakfast is served upstairs a light meal over which very few moments are spent. Then, if the King has not a morning engagement, he attends to his private correspondence, which often means dealing with a score of letters daily. Some letters he dictates, others he writes himself, autographed letters mostly being to royal relatives. Then comes the business of dealing with State correspondence, an ordeal which keeps Lord Stamfordham and his staff occupied the whole day.

No letter directed to the King, excepting it be from a crani or a mad man, who frequently pick out royalties for their effusions, goes unanswered. It may be a mere formal acknowledgment or it may contain an expression of the King's feelings. What ever the case, the courtesy of an early reply may always be expected from the Palace.

THE MAGNETIC GIRL

How She Compels Others to Obey Her Will

100,000 COPIES OF REMARKABLE BOOK DESCRIBING PECULIAR PSYCHIC POWERS TO BE DISTRIBUTED POST FREE TO READERS OF 'THE FREDERICTON MAIL.'

"The wonderful power of Personal Influence, Magnetism, Fascination, Mind Control, call it what you will, can surely be acquired by everyone no matter how unattractive or unsuccessful," says Mr. Elmer Ellsworth Knowles, author of the new book entitled: "The Key to the Development of the Inner Forces." The book lays bare many astounding facts concerning the practices of the Eastern Yogis, and describes a simple though effective system of controlling the thoughts and acts of others; how one may gain the love and friendship of those who might otherwise remain indifferent; how to quickly and accurately judge the character and disposition of an individual; how to cure the most obstinate diseases and habits without drugs or medicines; even the complex subject of projecting thoughts (telepathy) is explained.

Miss Josephine Davis, the popular stage favourite, whose portrait appears herewith, declares that Prof. Knowles' book opens the door to success, health and happiness in every mortal, no matter what his or her position in life. She believes that Prof. Knowles has discovered principles which, if universally adopted, will revolutionise the mental status of the human race.

The book, which is being distributed broadcast free of charge, is full of photographic reproductions showing how these unseen forces are being used all over the world, and how thousands upon thousands have developed powers which they little dreamed they possessed. The free distribution of the 100,000 copies is being conducted by a large London institution, and a copy will be sent post free to anyone interested. No money need be sent, but those who wish to do so may enclose 5 cents (stamps of your own country) to cover postage etc. All requests for the free book should be addressed to: National Institute of Sciences, Free Distribution Dept. 1532 B, No. 258 Westminster Bridge Road, London, S. E. England. Simply say you would like a copy of "The Key to the Development of the Inner Forces," and mention The Fredericton Mail.

LITTLE NELL

"God bless dadda, mamma, George Elsie, an' an' the wee dog ablow the bed," and then there was a long pause. The little boy raised his head from his mother's lap and showed a very red face.

"What wee dog, John?" asked mamma Fulton.

John looked round, but Elsie and George had left the kitchen. He tried to speak, but instead of words came tears.

Mamma Fulton took his hand raised him up, and led him to the room. A moment later she called "Dadda, come here a minute."

Dadda Fulton laid down his paper and walked to the room.

"Just see what's under the bed," said Mamma Fulton.

He went down on his knees and looked under the boy's bed. There was a little black heap near the wall. He crawled under the bed, took hold of it, and dragged it into the light.

"Who brought this here?" he asked somewhat sternly.

All the children were now crying. George was the eldest—he was a plump little fellow of nine—and the others looked to him to reply.

"Oh, dad, it was lyin' doon in the close; it couldn't walk, and some big boys were tormentin' it, so we were glein' it a wee rest—jist till th mornin'."

Dadda looked closely at the little terrier, with its coat and legs all splashed with mud, and saw that one of its paws was stained with blood. He lifted up the dog tenderly, carried it to the kitchen, and placed it on the rug before the fire. He gave it some food, and then it lay down as if it could keep awake no longer.

The children were satisfied, and went to bed happy.

The little dog was very lame, and was allowed to stay with the Fultons until it could run about with comfort.

Nell, as the children named her, was given a good bath in the wash-house. She lost her torn and tattered look, and became trim and smart. She and the children were soon fast friends. They loved to gather round the fire and play on the hearthrug.

As the days passed Dadda and Mamma Fulton began to look seriously at Nell. They were very poor, and had no money for a dog license, so they had to make up their minds to send Nell away. They often talked of the matter when the children were asleep without being able to decide what to do.

"I hate to disappoint the weans," said Dadda Fulton, "but Nell must go."

It was Saturday afternoon. The dinner dishes had been washed and put away. George, Elsie, and John were given their weekly halfpennies and sent out to spend them. Nell was not allowed to go with them, so she curled herself up in front of the fire, and blinked at the dancing flames.

Dadda Fulton put on his cap, took her in his arms, and went out. When he reached the closemouth he looked about to see if the children were near. Ah, there they were on the other side of the street looking at the good things in the window of a sweet-shop and wanting to buy the lot.

He hurried down the street and was soon out of sight. He walked on for a long time till he reached Glasgow Cross. Then he put Nell down near King William's Statue and ran away.

Nell did not waste a minute, but followed him at once. Dadda Fulton tried to slip into the underground railway station, but Nell was too sharp for him. She soon caught up to him and trotted by his side.

The Cross was very busy. Men and women were standing about or jostling each other on the pavement. Cars, vans, lorries, and barrows were passing from every corner.

Dadda Fulton tried to get away from Nell in the crowd, but she kept too close to him. At last, feeling like one who has done something very wrong, he jumped on a car going east and hurried upstairs. When he reached the top he turned and saw poor Nell standing at the Cross and gazing after the car as if she did not know what to do. She was such a forlorn-looking little creature that Dadda Fulton felt very miserable at having deserted her.

He was very quiet that afternoon as he sat in his wooden armchair with his feet on the fender and a newspaper in his hand.

Mamma Fulton had gone out to buy the Sunday dinner.

Suddenly there was a great noise on the stair. He rose and opened the door. In rushed the three children—Elsie crying, John spluttering with excitement, and George carrying Nell—poor, dirty, battered Nell.

"What's this?" asked Dadda Fulton.

"Oh, dadda," began Elsie—"Elsie was nearly rin ower," cried John.

"Ay, but Nell saved her," said George, with a smile and a pat for the little dog.

"When the children were quieted, the whole story was told.

Elsie had been crossing the street careless of the horse and van coming rapidly towards her. She would have been knocked down had not a little dog given a bark and jumped at the horse's nose. The horse had turned aside and Elsie was saved, but Nell's forelegs were badly crushed.

Brave little Nell! Her glistening eyes showed the terrible pain she was suffering.

It took a long time to put her right again. At first Dadda Fulton had little hope of being able to save her. But she was saved, although she was never as sound in her limbs as before the accident. However, though lame and not beautiful, to Elsie, George, and John she was the dearest little doggie in all Glasgow.

As a decoration for her bravery, a nice blue ribbon was tied around her neck, and this she wore to the end of her days.

There was now no thought of putting her away. A license was bought, and Nell became one of the family.

PLENTY OF FUN

The manager of Robinson's Famous Shows believes that the people like to be amused as well as startled. They have not only provided a whole troupe of the best clowns to be found, but other comedy features as well. There is old Hi Hoose, the "original farmer" from Hoopole Township, who keeps the audience laughing at the continuous mishaps that befall him. Joe Pentland, Ruba and Rastus, with their comedy mules are there, and the comical Barnells, with their funny trick house acrobatics, and numerous other comedy features, so there is a laugh every minute. Thrills and laughter chase each other throughout the whole performance. Don't miss this great show at Fredericton, Friday, July 24th.
