party with all his old-time courage

"I have endeavored to meet success without elation and reverse without diszouragement," he said to his followers in parliamegt last May in acknowledging their testimonial to him on the completion of forty years of continuous membership in the Commons. The Father of Parliament, in point of length of service as in point of ripe judgment, oratorial graces and public experience, he is still, in op position as in power, an optimist and an unflagging worker. During the fifteen years of his premiership, Sir Wilfrid, with the exception of his imperial conference trips and his western tour of 1910, and during Wigg-"That fellow Henpeckke has election campaigns, was never away no mind of his own." last December. And in the policies ha now advocates there is proof of his sincere belief in the ideal of government he thus stated. He is leading the fight for tariff revision down wards so that greedy men may be prevented from taking undue tolls from their fellow-men, so that combines and corporations may be curbed when they attempt "to fix prices one way to the producer and another way to the consumer." He believes that responsible government is the foundation stone of democratic institutions; that militarism has no place in modern democracy and that arbitration between capital and labor and between nation and nation is the hope of civilization and a practical ideal of government. He believes that Great Britain in the present world conflict is now battling for that ideal and his practical loyalty to British institutions and to all that the British flag stands for has been shown in the whole-hearted manner in which he has assisted the government in the present crisis and has assisted the recruiting movement by personal appeal in his own province. Some of his opponents may have attempted to play politics with a national crisis and may have sought an election appeal this autumn, relying for victory on a wave of patriotic sentiment. Sir Wilfrid has called a truce to party politics and has resolutely refused even to criticize a single act of the government since the war broke it. His imperialism is summed up in his declaration, "I believe the best British subject is the best Canadian" Our duties as British subjects, he has always maintained, must ever go hand in hand with our rights as Canadians. That gives the keynote to his attitude on the naval question and on the whole question of imperial co-operation in matters of trade and defence. The moral and the vin-

The appeal of his whole life, the chivalry of his nature, the poetry and imagination of his eloquence, the courage and the faith of high purpose make him today at seventy-three years of age, an exemplar and leader for every young Canadian. At seven-ty-three he is more than ever a young Canadian, in hope, in outlook, and in enthusiasm for service for the com-

"Fight on, I call upon you to fight the battle of public service." was his message last December to the young Liberals of Ontario gathered at Hamilton. "Stand to your ideals. Liberalism must turn with the same unvariable courage to the new problems of social reconstruction and social progress as our fathers applied to the large and pressing problems of constitutional reform. And to the students of Toronto last December, the Canadian Gladstone gave this magnificent clarion call to
