FAITH IN TREATIES

Marshall, counted fewer inhabitants than Denmark or Greece.

No notion is more palpably contradicted by history than that relied on by the school to which General Barnhardi belongs, that "culture"—literary, scientific and artistic—flourishes best in great military states.

EXAMPLE OF ENGLAND AND UNITED STATES.

The decay of art and literature in the Roman world began just when Rome's military power had made that world one great and ordered state. The opposite view would be much nearer the truth; though one must admit that no general theory regarding the relations of art and letters to governments and political conditions has ever yet been proved to be sound.

We of the Anglo-Saxon race do not claim for ourselves any more than we admit in others, any right to dominate by force or to impose our own type of civilization on less powerful races. Perhaps we have not that assured conviction of its superiority which the school of General Barnhardi expresses for the Teutons of North Germany.

The United States have twice withdrawn their troops from Cuba, which they could easily have retained. They have resisted all temptations to annex any part of the territories of Mexico, in which the lives and property of their citizens were for three years in constant danger.

So Britain six years ago, restored the amplest self-government to the two South African republics (having already agreed to the maintenance on equal terms of the Dutch language), and the citizens of those republics, which were in arms against her thirteen years ago, have now spontaneously come forward to support her by arms, under the gallant leader who then commanded the Boers.

And I may add that one reason why the princes of India have rallied so promptly and heartily to Britain in this war is because for many years past we have avoided annexing the territories of those princes, allowing them to adopt heirs when successors of their own families failed and leaving to them as much as possible of the ordinary functions of government.

It is only vulgar minds that mistake bigness for greatness, for greatness is of the soul, not of the body. In the judgment which history will hereafter pass upon the forty centuries of recorded progress toward civilization that now lies behind us, what are the tests that will apply to determine the true greatness of a people?

The small peoples need not fear the application of such tests.

THE CARE AND ABUSE OF FARM MACHINERY

Recent investigations by the Conservation Commission reveal some very interesting facts regarding the effect of care, or neglect, as the case may be, upon the life of machinery on the farm. Between ninety and ninety-five farms, divided into three districts, were visited in each of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

In Saskatchewan, out of ninety-four farmers visited by the commission's representative, seventy-six leave all of their implements out of doors. On seventy-three of the farms there were no implement sheds of any description. On twenty-one of the farms, sheds large enough to cover a part of the implements were found, in most cases this being only a buggy or a democrat, but not on one single farm was the machinery all housed. Not one farmer was found who painted his implements to protect them from the weather.

In Manitoba only fourteen out of ninety-four keep their machinery under cover during the winter, while forty-four claim to keep a part of it inside. On thirty-four of the Manitoba farms no provision whatever is made for protecting implements, and only four claim to have done any painting.

In the three districts visited in Alberta, mixed farming is carried on quite extensively, making more barn room available, so that implements are more likely to be protected, but even here, thirty-seven out of the ninety-two visited leave all machinery out of doors.

In one district in Ontario where forty farmers were visited, every man housed his implements during winter, although none of these men do any painting.

In the Ontario district visited where the implements are housed, the average life of the binder was found to be between sixteen and seventeen years. Many binders were seen which were in good running order after cutting twenty seasons' crops.

In Saskatchewan and Manitoba, where so much of the machinery is left out of doors, the average life of the binder is given by the farmers as about seven years, which is less than half that of the binder protected from the weather. Many binders do not last as long as seven years. One farmer near Moosomin, Sask., who, after twelve years, was retiring from the farm, held an auction sale. His binder, after cutting twelve crops, sold for $80, or fifty per cent. of the original cost, and his other machinery at proportionately high prices. It had all been well housed and the necessary painting and repairing had been done to keep it in good order. In a neighboring farm a binder which had cut only three crops, but which had been neglected and had stood out of doors, was being relegated to the scrap heap and a new one was being purchased.

An implement shed costs money, but if its use will double or treble the length of time the machinery will last it is a good shed. Farmers often say that they can not afford to build a shed. The truth is, they can not really afford to be without one. Apart from the additional power necessary for operation, the depreciation on unhoused machinery on the average sized farm is so great as to amount to much more than the cost and upkeep of an implement shed. The binder works for only a short time during the year, while machinery in a shop works the whole year through and lasts proportionately many times longer. It is simply a matter of care. The life of a machine extends in direct ratio to the care it receives and abuse and neglect will shorten the life of any mechanism. The manufacturer is not responsible for the care of the machinery after it is sold. The rests entirely with the farmer, and as a common-sense business proposition he should look after his own interests sufficiently to house his implements and thus save the thousands of dollars wasted annually in unnecessary depreciation.—F.C.N.
