LAWYER CLASHES
WITH POLICE MAGISTRATE MARSH

Magistrate Sets Aside the Law as Presented by Lawyer Rainsford--
The Evidence Looks Patchy

At the morning's session of the police court today a passage of sharp words occurred between Police Magistrate Marsh and H. B. Rainsford, lawyer for the defendant in the Ashton assault case.

The strings of harmony snapped when the lawyer objected to evidence being taken in the assault case against Thomas Henry, against whom information was laid for assault by Edgar Ashton of Kingsclear.

The lawyer for the plaintiff, J. J. F. Winslow, asked the court that evidence might be taken to show that a higher crime had been committed than that laid in the charge, which was common assault. He also stated that he wished to amend his charge.

Colonel Marsh consented to hear the evidence and objection was repeatedly urged by Mr. Rainsford on the ground that there was no room for amendment. He said that the charge had been laid, the warrant issued, bail had been taken and the prisoner had now pleaded guilty to the charge laid in the warrant. He held that the law did not permit any amendment now.

The magistrate waved him aside, however, and when Mr. Rainsford asked that his objection be recorded, His Honor refused to record "any such nonsense." He was reminded that according to law he had no right to refuse the objection.

"Well," said His Honor, "I take it."
