HOW LLOYD GEORGE HAS GIVEN HOPE TO ENGLAND'S WORKERS

London, Feb. 21.—In 1911 the English chancellor of the exchequer, David Lloyd George, staked his own fortunes and those of the government when he introduced his own famous Insurance Act. The magnitude of its scope, the amount involved, its compulsory nature, the number of people it embraced, charged the carrying of such a measure with the greatest risk.

And he knew that if it were carried its financial and social value would yet remain to be proved and that if the fruit of the tree did not justify the labor that brought it forth, the responsible person would be destroyed with it. All this Lloyd George knew, but he smiled grimly and went ahead.

After one of the greatest parliamentary struggles on record he had his way, thus placing upon the statute books the biggest piece of constructive social legislation that either his own or any other country had ever attempted. He stepped at once into the ranks of those great men who achieve the impossible.

cure many common ailments which are very different, but which all arise from the same cause—a system clogged with impurities. The Pills cause the bowels to move regularly, strengthen and stimulate the kidneys and open up the pores of the skin. These organs immediately throw off the accumulated impurities, and Biliousness, Indigestion, Liver Complaint, Kidney Troubles, Headaches, Rheumatism and similar ailments vanish. be insured. The test of their need for state insurance was whether their income fell below eight hundred dollars per annum, the amount beyond which compels the payment of income tax.

The great Friendly Societies in England had for many years conducted industrial insurance amongst those who might be described as the aristocracy of labor. This was a project to include all labor, male or female. The state guarantee was to be back of the societies which were to be used as a vital part of the state machinery of insurance. There was not to be a worker without privileges previously belonging only to a few.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBLE.

The Friendly Societies, naturally, could only give benefits in proportion to the amounts received from the workers and that less cost of administration. The new scheme required a larger gross subscription than the single contribution the workers could afford. The government should make itself responsible and share in the cost.

Further, since one result would be better health and better work from the employee, his increased economic value to his employer should be represented by a contribution from the latter. Further yet, if the working classes were to appreciate its value and the vital principle of thrift be unimpaired, they must share in the cost in proportion to their capacity. These three contributions of state, employer and worker, all for the benefit of one of the three contributing parties, would enable the state to offer to the beneficiary value for the total contribution that his own single part could not possibly provide.

Hence the phrase, "ninepence for fourpence," employed by Mr. Lloyd George to explain in terms of weekly contribution what the insured were to receive. The ninepence (eighteen

WOMEN DOCTORS

Dr. Emily Stowe Was the First Woman to Practice in Canada

The distinction of being the first woman graduate in medicine in Canada belongs to Dr. Augusta Stowe-Gullen, a leading physician of Toronto, who was born in Norwich, Ontario. She studied at the Toronto School of Medicine, graduating from Victoria and Trinity Universities. Her mother, the late Dr. Emily Howard Stowe, was the first woman to practice medicine in Canada. Dr. Stowe graduated from the New York Medical College for Women in 1868, and was an untiring worker in the fight to secure the admission of women to the university.

In this day of enlightenment, when women doctors are many in Canada, it is not easy for one to recognize fully the difficulties that lay in the path of this pioneer. Dr. Stowe's struggle to practise in Toronto was filled with difficulties, but she surmounted them and won as well for the women of this country, the opening to many spheres of activity.

Her daughter, moreover, did not find her path pleasant when she was studying for her life work, for there were many before she graduated in 1883 bitterly opposed to women entering the higher professions. But her perseverance made the way easier for the women who followed, and, for this, as well as her brilliancy in her profession and in other lines of endeavor, Dr. Stowe-Gullen is eminent among Canadian women just as her mother was revered for her fine qualities.

OPTICAL TELEGRAPH

This Serves as a Telephone For Deaf People

An optical telegraph intended to fill the place of the telephone for talking with a deaf person has been invented by a deaf and dumb married couple. It consists essentially of a keyboard as in a typewriter, through whose keys single electric currents pass in each circuit is included an an incandescent lamp with a flat surface, bearing a letter of the alphabet or a Roman numeral. Pressing any key causes the corresponding lamp to glow. Thus words and sentences are spelled out and numbers are formed.

The keyboard can be operated as fast as that of an ordinary typewriter, so that with practice communication becomes very smooth and rapid. Each station, of course, must contain both a sender and a receiver, and these may be in different rooms or in houses a long distance apart.

The instrument can be conveniently used for conversation between a deaf person and a normal person who is ignorant of the finger language. The silence with which the device is operated is a very important point in its favor. This feature might make it especially useful where quiet or secrecy in transmitting information is desirable, as in sending war news or secret instructions in business houses.—"Literary Digest."

QUEER NAMES

An Englishman, coming by train to Glasgow for the first time, on passing Motherwell Junction, said to the gentleman opposite, with whom he had been chatting:

"Queer name, Motherwell. Is that a Fatherwell next?"

"No," was the reply; "but we come immediately to Both-well!"

GHOST OR NIGHTMARE

Strange Malady May be Caused by Indigestible Food

Many superstitions and ghost stories are due to nightmares, says Dr. Walter R. Hadwen in the Commercial Review. The nightmare would appear to attack men much more than women, and to be a malady rather of early adult life than one of later years.

The malady can boast of quite a respectable antiquity. It was fully understood and accurately described by both Greeks and Romans of ancient days, and several well written treatises upon the subject have come down to us from the seventeenth century.

The illusory being which seems to settle on one's chest that in all ages and in every country of the world been called a demon or evil spirit, and has been held responsible for many an uncanny episode, both in ancient and modern times. Probably the ghuls and jins of all the African races which are believed to hover everywhere in the darkness, and of which even the strongest and stoutest warriors are terrified, have their origin in nightmare.

Nightmare, Dr. Hadwen says, is certainly quite different from a dream. Nightmare is neither sleeping nor waking, but it is a condition between the two, a kind of semi-consciousness. Men, the chief sufferers, are usually literary characters or those accustomed to indoor life. And coarse and unwholesome diet has often appeared to be the precursor of it.

AMAZING APPETITES

Some Remarkable Feats Performed by Hearty Eaters

A man living in Massachusetts, before entering on an egg-eating contest, was known as the champion fried egg-eater of the Berkshires. He had a record of 22 eggs, and the wager was on the contention that he could easily make away with 25. When he had eaten 17, however, he was seized with an attack of acute indigestion, and he had to stop. This man also had a record of 54 ears of green corn.

At the beefsteak dinners of many political clubs astounding records are made in the consumption of viands. Some of those who take part think nothing of eating 10 and 12 pounds of meat at the sitting.

A Rhode Island farmer had a record of half a bushel of walnuts, of which he was extraordinarily fond. He used half a small bag of salt while eating them.

A Chicago man inordinately fond of mush and milk lived on it for a week, eating four great bowlfuls of it three times a day.

Heart and Nerves Were Bad.

Could Not Sleep.

To the thousands of people who toss on a sleepless pillow night after night, or who pace the bedroom floor with nerves on the jump, the heart action all wrong, and to whose eyes sleep will not come, Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills offer the blessing of sound refreshing slumber, as they restore the equilibrium of the deranged nerve centres and correct the wrong action of the heart.

Mrs. Charles Teel, Horncastle, Ont., writes:—"Just a few lines to let you know what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills did for me. My heart and nerves were so bad I could not sleep, and the least noise or excitement would make me feel so that I used to think I was going to die, and I would tremble until I could hardly stand. I took doctor's medicine, but it did not do me much good. At last I tried Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and can certainly say they did me a great amount of good. I can recommend them to anyone who is suffering as I was."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have been on the market for the past twenty years, and have done more to steady shaky nerves and strengthen weak hearts, than any other known preparation.
