THE ANNUAL ENCAENIA

generosity of heart that your love is still a dear possession in absence or unkindness—these are the best things in life which money cannot buy, and without which money can buy nothing."

Moreover these are the things that endure and of which Fortune cannot deprive us.

"All that is at all
Lasts ever, past recall:
Earth changes, but thy soul and
God stand sure."

TO GIVE, NOT GET.

A common aim in life, characteristic of youth, but by no means confined to it, is to get, to acquire. Later we find that the complement of this is to give, to impart.

All your lives you have been acquiring—in the schools, at the University—gathering rich stores of knowledge, filling your minds with golden thoughts, developing power and ability. Now the question for you ought to be "How can we expend this accumulated wealth for the good of others." To hoard the knowledge and power we possess for selfish ends only, is to be a miser of more than gold.

"God uses us to help each other so Lending our minds out."

The hope of our democracy today is in the young men and women sent out, well equipped for service, from our higher institutions of learning. Your influence should be felt in the social, commercial and political life of our country. The great need of Canada today is men:—

"Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office cannot
buy;
Tall men sun-crowned, who live
above the fog
In public duty and in private thinking."

And where can we expect to find them if not among the graduates of our Universities?

In the Tate Gallery in London, I saw a picture by an eminent artist which impressed me strongly.

Stretched on a bier lay the body of a man covered with a pall. Scattered about in confusion, as if hastily thrown down, lay the ermine robe, emblematical of rank and power, the spear, shield and helmet, of military renown; a golden goblet sensual pleasures; a book and life, Art and literary fame; flowers and peacock feathers, the pride and pomp of life—all illustrating what bubbles we are and what bubbles we pursue. The legend attached to the picture expressed the lesson the painter designed to teach:—

"What I spent, I had;
What I saved, I lost;
What I gave, I have."

The only thing that endures and of which death cannot rob us, is what we have given of ourselves to others.

Just one more thought:—In the hurry and bustle in the strain and stress of life, keep alive your aesthetic tastes, your love of Nature, of Literature, and of Art; do not allow them to become atrophied by disuse. The man or woman who is not awed by the sight of Niagara or charmed by such a poem as the "Immortality Ode" or moved to ecstasy by the Hallelujah Chorus in the Messiah is as much to be pitied as one who has lost his sense of sight or hearing.

In Darwin's Autobiography it is pathetic to read that, owing to too strenuous application to his favorite pursuit, he had entirely lost his appreciation of music. It had become to him only a series of confused sounds.

It is a common belief that with advancing years, our love of Nature must necessarily weaken and fade, but my own experience shows that Emerson has the truer thought.

"Wordsworth writes" he says "of the delights of the boy in Nature:—

"For never will come back the hour
Of splendor in the grass, of glory
in the flower."

"But I have," he continued, "just seen a man, well knowing what he spoke of, who told me that the verse was not true for him; that his eyes opened as he grew older, and that every spring was more beautiful than the last."

Thus in the evening of life when the years of well earned leisure come and "the certain moment cuts the deed off, calls the glory from the gray" the cultivation of this part of our nature may be a comfort and a solace.

And now, in closing, I cannot, I think, do better than leave with you the last words of the great Sir Walter Scott.

As he lay dying and his friend Lockhart leaned over him to catch his last words he did not counsel him to strive for wealth, or rank, or fame, although he himself had won all these, but he said in words so simple that a child could understand them, yet so profound that a philosopher could add nothing:—

"My dear, be a good man, be virtuous, be religious, be a good man. Nothing else will give you a comfort when you come to lie here.

God bless you."
