A NEW VOICE IN BEECHER'S PULPIT

A sapient soul is the Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis and wise in the wisdom of his generation; canny, quicker than chain lightning, human as Ty Cobb, and as a preacher his batting average is as high, writes Peter Clark Macfarlane in Collier's Weekly.

He maintains the traditions of American pulpit oratory in the very spot where it reached its flower and for forty years loosed its fragrance on the highways of American national life; for Dr. Hillis preaches in the pulpit of Henry Ward Beecher in Brooklyn, with the historic memories of that embattled and embattling spirit around him.

On the right of his pulpit as he speaks is the F. William Herring portrait of Beecher. The rays of an incandescent light falls cunningly upon it, making the picture seem alive and just a trifle spiritualized. It is the aura gleam of the soul of Beecher, looking on over the shoulder of Hillis into the very faces of some of those men and women who had heard the Thunderer for years.

REMINERS OF BEECHER. Beneath the portrait of Beecher is the large, plush-covered pulpit chair in which he once sat, couched like a lion, till the moment for his mighty burst of self-expression had come.

Across the top of the chair, wrought in lace, are the magic letters, "Beecher." On the left of the pulpit against the wall, is a glass case containing the battle flags of the Sixty-seventh New York, which was the First Long Island Regiment, one that was recruited in part from the Beecher constituency in Brooklyn, and which was known throughout the war as Beecher's Phalanx. Moreover, these are the very walls, the very galleries, with their rakish pitch towards the pulpit, which once echoed with the mighty diapasons of the Beecher eloquence.

Yet Hillis holds his Plymouth congregation in the hollow of his hand and with Beecher looking on, coolly disregards every characteristic and canon of the Beecher style. The great one after mumbled and rumbling through his nose in the early passages of his sermon was wont soon to step back and swing his mighty right arm like a wing of a Dutch windmill while his great voice boomed the rolling thunders of his mind and soul. Hillis never booms. His

A DIFFERENCE IN METHODS

The Beecher oratory was a storm, a chaos, in which flowers bloomed and mountains trembled and fell down, a mighty battle of the elements, a war of the emotions of the worlds, a flood, an earthquake, a cataclysm. Agter which came glorious calm, and the still, small voice of God. That is sometimes it was like this. Some other times the stage properties would not work. The thunder was there. It boomed but had no reverberating quality; it kindled no echo. At such times the congregation of Plymouth Church walked soberly home and said respectively of Mr. Beecher that he was not at his best this morning.

There was a power in the passion of Beecher that is greater than the power in the passion of Hillis. Beecher planted blows in the solar plexus of the soul. Hillis will not do that. Rather will be put a steam hot towel on the face of conscience and so open the pores of man's moral nature that he will himself punch his plexus. Beecher was brave. Hillis is not a coward. Beecher fought human slavery when the conservative classes all about him counseled moderation. Hillis today dares to be distinctly progressive. His church is full of conservatives, but not their conservatism. He is for the initiative and the referendum; for the recall, for direct primaries, and direct election of United States Senators. Not a widely-known man in his church, probably, but is against all or most all of these principles. Hillis is for Roosevelt and he takes no pains to hide his views upon the subject.

The people of Plymouth Church loved and revered Beecher, and they love and revere Hillis seeing nothing odious in comparisons, believing that they differ merely in one star difference from another star in glory.

TOURING CAR ABLAZE MAN TERRIBLY BURNED

London, Ont. Aug. 14—William Dillon, a prominent Sarnia business man was so horribly burned near here last evening when his big touring car caught fire after overturning that grave fears are entertained for his recovery. Dillon with a boy of fifteen named Lucas, was on his way to Arkona from Grand Bend and about 9.15 attempted to pass a buggy on a narrow piece of roadway on the town line. When he turned out, his car went over the edge of the road and overturned twice before it came to a stand at the foot of the embankment. Lucas was thrown out but Mr. Dillon who was driving was held under the teetering wheel.
