MOST KILLED ON TRACKS
ARE TRESPASSERS

There is hardly a city or village in the United States which cannot point to a tombstone in its cemetery marking the last resting place of some former inhabitant who was killed while trespassing on railway property, or to some crippled boy or man who is a living example of the danger attendant upon going on railway property not provided for public use by the company.

The Interstate Commerce Commission reports 50,708 trespassers' lives sacrificed and 51,183 trespassers maimed and mangled from June 30, 1901, to June 30, 1911. The total number of railway passengers killed during the ten years was 4,340, less than the number of trespassers killed during any one year of that period. The number of railway employees killed was less than two-thirds of the number of trespassers killed.

Fourteen trespassers killed and fourteen injured every twenty-four hours has been the average casualty roll on railway right of way and rolling stock in the United States during the last ten years.

Thousands of dollars have been spent by the railways in erecting and maintaining signs along their property warning trespassers to keep off, which relieved the companies in some instances from damage suits, but has not lessened the loss of life. Very few of the states, writes A. A. Coult in Harper's Weekly, have adequate laws for the punishment of trespassers and the railway officials have had great difficulty in prosecuting the offenders successfully in the courts.

Of the trespassers killed and injured during the last decade 13,000 were under the age of 14 years and 20,000 between the ages of 14 and 21 years. In other words there have been enough minors killed and injured in the United States in the last ten years to make more than enough mile-posts for the mileage travelled in a trip around the world.

The president of one of the railways has recently written to the Governor of each state traversed by his road asking him to help the railways to put a stop to trespassing. In part he says:

All that is necessary to stop it is to recognize the facts that the property of the railways, excepting places provided for the public use, can never be otherwise than a place of danger for those who have no business on it, and to pass and enforce laws for the punishment of those who intrude upon it. This is done in foreign countries and is one of the main reasons why the number of fatalities on foreign railways is less in proportion than on the railways of the United States.

Representatives of the railways have repeatedly appeared before Legislatures to ask appropriate legislation dealing with this subject, and innumerable times they have had trespassers arrested. But little progress seems to have been made in securing the passage and enforcement of proper laws. The fact has been widely published over the country that in the year ended June 30, 1911, 10,396 people were killed on the railways of the United States. How that if no trespassers had been killed the number would have been only 5,112—in other words, that of those killed 5,284, or 51 percent, belonged to this class.

Some figures compiled by Frank V. Whiting, general claims attorney, New York Central Lines, and published in the 'Railway Age Gazette' of March 8, 1912, are very instructive regarding the causes of death to trespassers, their social standing, etc.

It is a significant fact that of the number of trespassers killed practically 80 per cent. or 1,125, last year are shown to have been 'struck by engine or car,' in other words were walking or standing upon the tracks; 520 were killed in 'getting on or off cars and engines,' 523 'while on trains,' and 116 from 'other causes' he writes.

There are many trespassers on the tracks of railways who are regularly employed and who made it a practice to use the right of way between streets or highways in going to or from their work. The tracks are also used to a considerable extent by pedestrians when public highways are wet and muddy or difficult to walk upon.

We found that of 1,000 persons killed while trespassing 89 resided near the place of accident, 321 resided at a place distant from where the accident occurred and the residence of the balance, 190, was not ascertained.
