MRS. WESTER DEFENDS 'REDLIGHT' TOUR

An entirely sane idea may be marred by the pursuance of a mad method. This is what happened to me. I wanted to find out certain things about life that had been obscure, I elected to protect myself in advance. That is where I erred. But, just the same, I found out what I wanted to know.

In these words, Mrs. W. T. Webster, wife of the general freight agent of the Monon Railroad, defends her spectacular visit to the Red-Light district in Louisville Tuesday night and her arrest on a charge of disorderly conduct.

"A short time ago," said Mrs. Webster, "certain friends of mine who are publishers, knowing my views on the single standard of morality, asked me to write about it. I felt that, while my views were insufficiently definite, I should like to have first hand material for illustrating them."

"Now, here in Chicago, I did not feel able to risk the publicity in such a venture. I wanted to find out why men find a fascination in the ways of sin. I wanted to find out for myself—not by second hand information."

"That is why I went to Louisville, where I was arrested. I do not even know the name of the street I was in. I submitted myself to the tender mercies of a hackman. I told him I wanted to 'go the limit.' I don't know what that means exactly, but I've heard men say it."

"Anyway, I was taken to a place where there were types of humanity the lowest conceivable. I saw women there, but I paid no attention to them."

"What I wanted was to reverse the situation and to try to discover the thrill, if any, there might be. Instead of a man buying drinks for women, here was I, a woman, buying drinks for men, listening to their conversation."

"I listened to the talk of these men. They were most likely the greatest scoundrels in Kentucky. But I was interested only in trying to find some fascination about them—something in common between them and me."

WHAT HE WANTED.

Arthur H. Engelbach, in his collection of anecdotes of the beach, tells this story about Lord Braxfield, who was among the last of the Scotch judges who rigidly adhered to the broad Scotch dialect.

"He's ye only counsel, mon?" he said to Maurice Margot when placed at the bar.

"No," was the reply. "Do ye want to ha'e any appointment?" continued the judge.

"No," said Margot, "I only want an interpreter to make me understand what your lordship says."

People seldom try to sit down on the man who stands up for his rights. Men fight with their fists and lose. Women fight with their tears and win.

Suffrage party. The case of Mrs. Webster brought out interesting opinions.

"A woman has the right to do anything her husband does, that's reasonable enough," Mrs. William Valet declared.

Mrs. Liska Stillman Churchill of Colorado, said that the single moral standard is beginning to make itself felt in the Western States where the influence of the feminine voter is a decided factor in social conditions.

"It's going to be hard after a while when universal suffrage is no longer a novelty, for men to live one life at home and another some where else. The 'wild oats' theory is soon to be consigned to the limbo of forgotten things. I believe that the single standard of morals is inevitable."

TRAMP STEAMERS

They Are So-called Because They Are the Wanderers of the Ocean

A "tramp" steamer is a "tramp" because she wanders the world over carrying the most advantageous cargoes she can procure and proceeding to any port, no matter how unfamiliar and remote, to which her manifest takes her.

She is not a "tramp," explains Harper's Magazine, because she goes about in tatters and poverty. Quite the contrary is true. There are great tramp lines immensely wealthy and powerful, and the ships that fly these flags are modern in every respect equipped with wireless, of vast tonnage, and most comfortably appointed in respect to officers' quarters. When his vessel lies in port the tramp captain appears to the envious long-shore onlooker to live a life of the most agreeable sort.

As a general rule, however, the captain himself holds his occupation in no such high regard. Tramp captains may gratify their desire for romance, it is true, but only in a limited way, after all; and their prospect for material prosperity is of the smallest. The cash return is little enough; for all the responsibility assumed, the rich cargo and lives carried through months of anxious weather, of gales and fogs at sea, of lonely and monotonous wastes, the wage isn't much greater than a commonplace bookkeeper may earn ashore.

The pay of a junior officer aboard a tramp steamer would outrage the feelings of an alert office boy; the pay of a first mate would shock a bank clerk. But once a first-class officer becomes a captain, his pay is practically doubled. If his owners possess no other ship than his the chance for advancement is extremely slight; but if he is in the service of one of the great freighting lines, his prospect at the best is that of the newest ship at a wage of $1,500 a year. The next move in fortune of the tramp captain is to the command of a mail steamer. Having obtained this eminence in the service of one of the most considerable trans-Atlantic lines, he is paid no less than $2,000 a year, and possibly as much as $4,000 or $5,000. It is the ultimately sought-for job.

BERNHARDT ON ECONOMY.

Sarah Bernhardt, reproached for her extravagance at a dinner which she gave during her last visit to New York, said:

"I agree with Octave Mirbeau that the cause d'epargne, the savings bank the stocking, is the curse of every country. Hoarding is ignoble."

Mme. Bernhardt laughed. "I shall always be proud," she said, "of the answer I once made to a little girl who asked me what economy was."

"Economy, my child," I answered, "is a way of spending money without getting any fun out of it."

HIS BETTER HALF.

"Here, my dear," said the husband, producing his purse, "here is $60 I won playing cards over at Brown's last night. You may have it to buy that dress you wanted."

Reluctantly the conscientious wife took the money and then said, with an expression of rigid rectitude:

"I simply shudder at the thought of using money gained in such a way. Henry, promise me that after you have won enough for me to buy the hat to go with the dress you will never again touch those awful cards. I don't want my husband to become a gambler."
