THE EARNINGS OF SPIES

Large Sums Paid For Inside Information—Espionage a Profession

A spy who really takes an interest in his work and makes himself useful and trustworthy to the Government, that employs him—or her—may just have a very remunerative, if not exactly a pleasant, time.

A regular, accredited Government "agent" may expect at least $2,500 a year. Germany, which is recognized as the country that makes the most use of espionage, has also a system of bonuses, to encourage the spy and spur him on to greater efforts. If he should be lucky enough to secure an especially valuable piece of information for the Fatherland he may be presented with $2,500 or $5,000. Germany spends an enormous sum annually in the attempt to discover the plans and intentions of other Governments. It is estimated at over $400,000, and German secret service agents are found in the most unlooked-for places.

Russia's expenditure runs very close to that of Germany, and her system is agreed to be the finest in the world. Russian spies have figured in novels galore. In fact the Russian system of espionage is the most perfectly organized human machine in existence. Her neighbors, France and Austria-Hungary, spend about $300,000 and $200,000 respectively for the same purpose, but it is not brought to such a pitch of perfection as in Russia. Italy devotes $600,000 for her secret service, but this amount is divided by the Ministry of the Interior as follows: For secret service, $200,000; for police rewards, $170,000; and for detective service at home and abroad, $230,000.

Spying is looked upon as a fine art in Japan, and she runs Germany very close for the world's championship in getting at other nations' secrets. There is a curious kink in the Eastern character that makes them adepts at this sort of work. Orientals are noted for their patience, and they bring to this work a never-failing store of it. This, together with their ingenuity—in some cases cunning—makes them remarkably clever spies. The war in Manchuria gave a striking example of the value of the work done by Japanese secret service agents.

In England the service is principally controlled by the Intelligence Department of the Admiralty and the War Office, and has in recent years been raised to the same high standard of perfection credited to Russia and Japan.

To most foreigners spying is simply a business, a profession to be entered like any other, and to be paid as well as other dangerous professions requiring skill and courage. Spying, perhaps more than any other profession, needs skill and courage. Often the spy has to act a very difficult part, and the least failure of nerve would spell disaster. It is audacity that brings him through the most critical situations.

It is a striking fact that when women take up the profession they generally make better spies than men. Their feminine instinct and resourcefulness enables them to carry out the boldest plans, where men by their less tactful methods might fail.

A Gallant Old Fighter

of Montreal, a hunter's guide in the back woods of Beauce county, near the Maine boundary and a veteran of the Franco-Prussian war of 1870-71. Although 77 years of age, the old Frenchman, upon the outbreak of the present war, went to Paris at his own expense and offered his services to the Minister of War in a personal interview. The Minister, of course, could not accept a soldier at that age, at least "not for the present." These latter words carried great comfort to Mr. Cholley, who hopes yet to account for a few Germans.

Lower Birth Rate

It is common knowledge that the birth rate in France has fallen much, but it is not generally realized how rapid and great has been the fall in the birth rate in Germany during the last decades. An eminent German scientist has discovered that, though the number of marriages has practically not changed, the birth rate has fallen by more than 25 per cent., and the mortality by 35 to 40 per cent.

Meat Rations

The meat ration of the British and the German soldiers is about 1 1/2 pounds a day; that of the French soldier only 1/2 pound. But the French soldier has nearly twice as much bread as the Englishman and about 10 ounces more than the German. The mainstay of the Kaiser's soldiers seems to be potatoes—3 pounds 5 ounces a day for every man of them.

Leopold Neumann, Who Has Been Masquerading in Chicago's Best Society, Submits His Report--Drank Whiskey in Tea-Cups

Chicago, June 4.—Leopold Neumann, by birth and had studied medicine, masquerading as "Dr. Hugo Meyer" It cost me about fifty dollars a day in Chicago's "best society," has made his report to the United Societies, of which he is an organizer, told me to go the limit. The money "Dr. Hugo Meyer" was introduced to society as a gay Viennese surgeon of wealth. He was on a visit to this country and posed as a relative of Dr. Kuno Meyer, the noted German authority on Celtic literature. Mr. Neumann's object was to investigate the thirst of society for strong drink. Many society reform organizations had investigated the dances given by the United Societies and denounced the conditions alleged to prevail among the young people.

A crusade was begun to stop the sale of liquor at these dances. The crusaders succeeded in stopping the sale of spirituous liquors. This aroused the United Societies. The organization has a membership of sixty thousand, has a wide political influence and fights under the banner of "personal liberty."

It is largely made up of Germans and represents the "wets" in all parts of the State. Mr. Neumann was ordered to "get something" on society. He was introduced to two women who he says knew his identity smoking, and his object. Then, as Dr. Meyer, deeply interested in the feminist movement, he made his debut.

EASY TO ACT PART
"It was easy for me to play the part," he said. "I am an Austrian in my investigations of two months." (Continued on page three.)
