"Paint up! Paint up!" So runs the line
We see in many cities:
A dingy town, as all opine,
Is seven thousand piles.
So do some painting now and then
A sage who unafraid is Says here's an instance where the men
Might emulate the ladies.

ANNOYED AT HER
13th HUSBAND

Evansville, Ind., May 21.—Mrs. Polly Anne Weed Strodes, who is seventy years old in her own right and who has been married thirteen times, announced today that she will divorce Harrison Strodes as quickly as she ever disposed of a husband in her life and will marry a man who is her ideal. Mrs. Strodes having shifted her ideal fourteen times knows whereof she utters.

Mrs. Strodes' principal complaint was that she was forced to sign a bond for fifty dollars in the City Court when her husband was arraigned charged with making an effort to be Mrs. Strodes' sole widower. This bond was signed, she explained, while her husband stood over her and threatened her with instant death and the countless incidental discomforts which attend it. "He was like a madman," she declared, "and when he left me he left the State, I believe, forever. No woman should allow her husband to beat her as Harrison did me. The man did not realize his own strength."

Mrs. Strodes was asked if she intended to take any action in the matter and then announced that Harrison would never again enter her home on the old basis.

"I have an ideal," said Mrs. Strodes, "and I will bless the day when I can rest my head upon his shoulder and say, 'At peace, darling' Stronger men turn away at this juncture, but Mrs. R. Strodes was talking about a favorable subject, and continued:—

"I have had some of the most desirable husbands in Indiana, and I am competent to judge a good one when I see him. All except Harrison; I was very careless in selecting him. There is no set method of winning men, but I believe that flattery is almost invariably effective. They all like it, and their hearts leap warmly at the least bit of it."

John F. Gleason of St. John, is in the city.

The really crafty husband never remembers the color of the new stenographer's eyes.
