MEN'S BANQUET

It is a struggle between the classes and the masses. We will be constantly studying the social question but we will never reach a solution of it. Still, that need not prevent us from constantly studying it. He spoke of the struggle between slaves and their owners and the struggle between the feudal lords and their serfs, struggles which have not yet ended. Then there was the great industrial struggle, which followed the introduction of machinery. The industrial struggle has resulted in a tendency cityward and a congestion of population. There is the problem of the country and the problem of the city, and they have considerable in common. There is the impoverishment of spiritual and intellectual life in the rural districts. There are problems in the city and in the country and we are trying to face these problems side by side. The masses are struggling for a fair chance in the world's work and the world's life. The masses want a measure of leisure and a share of the comforts of life; in fact, they want to be in a position to live decently. It is considered by many to be a most worthy goal for their ambition. There has been a great awakening on this question during the past few years, and it is due to social service organizations in the churches, such as the one he represented. The awakening of the social problem has been greatly forwarded, and the social conscience of the church as well as the nation has had an awakening. It is surprising to think that great statesmen like John Bright and W. E. Gladstone in their day did not lend the weight of their influence against the employment of child labor. He had also learned from a magazine that Queen Victoria of blessed memory, did not throw in the weight of her influence against the abolition of flogging in the British army. But for the abolition of flogging we would not have the splendid British army we have today fighting for the liberty of Europe. Why, we would be ashamed today of the soldiers who fought at Waterloo. It was regrettable that in the past that eminent men had been opposed to the abolition of child labor. Why there were those who thought it no hardship for children to work thirteen hours a day in factories. Thanks to the growth of the social service movement no man would favor such a condition of affairs today."

THE GREAT WAR.

The speaker made reference to the European war and expressed the belief that many good things would be brought out of it. God is leading the world and will lead it in the right way. The war is giving to the world a new chivalry. It is glorious to feel that we are waging this war on behalf of a chivalrous nation that was trampled under foot by brutality. England is fighting the battle of freedom on behalf of a little nation unable to defend herself and the world breathes in sympathy for the Belgians today. The world is going to be more secure for the little nation as a result of this war.

This war in the interests of chivalry means a revolution in the upward movement of the masses. It will not be possible for us to get down to the level we were in before this war began. What has not happened in the interests of collective necessity during this war. Railways and steamship companies have been taken over by the nations. The directors of many big companies have been sent out on holiday while the nation handles their business. There was no squeal or roar from the directors when the government took over their business. Over here in Canada party feeling was forgotten for the time being and more power was given to the government than it ever had before. Many utilities in the belligerent countries have been socialized to a degree unknown in the past and there have been marked changes along this line since the war broke out. In England, that wonderful little Welshman, Lloyd George (applause), has one thousand industries under his control. Will these industries, when the war is over, go back to where they were before. Time alone will settle that. Human efficiency has come to the front in this war. Physical health and intellectual power are essential to human efficiency but you cannot have human efficiency without character. In this connection the church and the school were the greatest factors for good known to the human race.

TEMPERANCE REFORM.

The speaker dwelt upon the great progress made by the temperance reform movement during the war. He praised the action of the Czar of Russia in abolishing the manufacture and sale of vodka, involving a loss of revenue of five hundred million dollars. It is doubtful if King Alcohol will ever recover from the blow administered by the Russian government. The action of the French government in abolishing the use of absinthe has had a wonderful effect. The French army today is not the army which fought in 1870. It is a new army and under its great leader who, by the way, is a Huguenot, is doing marvelous work for civilization. He regretted that England was behind Russia and France in temperance legislation during the war. A bill was introduced in parliament but it did not become law. The government was afraid of the influence of the beer and whiskey barons and was compelled to withdraw the measure.

The speaker felt sure that the war would have a beneficial effect on the liquor traffic. The west had taken the lead in temperance legislation. Alberta and Saskatchewan had adopted prohibition and Manitoba is likely to adopt it. If the people of British Columbia ever got an opportunity to vote, as they will have some day, they will follow in the footsteps of the other provinces of the west. He believed that on the temperance question Ontario was somewhat behind New Brunswick. Nova Scotia was all under prohibition except the City of Halifax and only the casting vote of the speaker of the legislature had saved that city from coming under the law. In New Brunswick nine out of fifteen counties were dry and two out of three cities were dry.

SCORED THE GRAFTERS.

"I don't suppose," said the speaker, "you have any graft in New Brunswick. (Laughter.) He sometimes read about spavined horses being sold to the government for military purposes. This is not a political matter at all. Out in Manitoba there are four cabinet ministers, including an ex-premier, on trial charged with defrauding the public treasury. The party to which these men belong deserve credit for bringing about a change of government. They were in a majority and helped to rout the old party at the polls. The Conservatives voted with the Liberals to wipe out the stain upon the fair name of the province. The man who would sell spavined horses to the government for the use of our brave boys going to the front is guilty of treason. Such a man is prepared to suck his neighbor's life-blood and risk the life of the nation. The church should deal with this question of graft and if necessary, discipline its own membership."

All of us who have a sense of right have got to unite in voice, vote and influence and rid our country of graft. A lot of us are willing to go to the front and fight in time of war but we are not willing to make a little sacrifice in time of peace.

SPIRIT OF SACRIFICE.

Another thing the war has developed is a splendid spirit of sacrifice and it has developed particularly among the
