BISHOP HOWLEY REPLIES TO MORINE'S SECRETARY

The following communication from the Right Rev. M. F. Howley, Archbishop of Newfoundland recently appeared in the Toronto World:

Editor World: A copy of a Canadian paper has been forwarded to me containing a letter from Mr. R. A. Reid, formerly secretary to Mr. A. B. Morine, K.C., &c., while the latter gentleman was in Newfoundland some eight or ten years ago. The greater part of this letter contains only very vile, personal abuse of me, which requires no answer. There are however some statements there made intended to deceive the people of Canada and injure my character and which I consider deserving of an answer.

The principal accusation contained in the letter when stripped of its insulting and violent verbiage seems to be that I tried illegally to obtain a loan of "some thousands" from the public treasury for the purposes of the Roman Catholic Church, that I offered as security certain church properties which Mr. Morine (who was then financial secretary of the society) declared to be valueless and refused to grant me the loan.

The accusation is utterly absurd and unfounded. But even if it were true that I did want money for church purposes and tried to get a loan, I do not see that it would be a very great crime. But to say that I "demanded it from the public treasury is really too wild a statement to deserve a serious answer. If I mistake not it would require an act of parliament or at least legislative sanction to take money from the "public treasury."

In order to try and discover what is really meant by this accusation it will be necessary to explain a little our monetary affairs here in Newfoundland and also to allude to some matters personal to myself as head of the Roman Catholic body here.

We have in St. John's a "government savings bank" This institution is a body corporate managed by a board of directors appointed entirely by the government. The principal object of the bank is to receive and finance the small hoardings of the people. It is also one of the legitimate powers of the bank to advance on good security loans to individual firms, corporations, &c., and to accommodate the people by charging a moderate rate of interest.

I came to St. John's as bishop in February, 1895. This was not long after the "bank crash" December 1894. I found the whole financial and commercial fabric of the community in a state of confusion and unrest. Several of the large mercantile establishments had collapsed, and all the public institutions, clubs, etc. was in a state of panic and weighed down with debt. Our Roman Catholic Total Abstinence Society one of the noblest institutions in the island was in the debt to the amount of $15,000 and the sheriff's officers were about to be placed upon the doors of their splendid hall. They appealed to me, and rather than allow that noble society to succumb, I obtained for them from the savings bank the sum of $15,000. As security I lodged in the bank the full amount of the advance in government debentures. The society honorably paid back every cent in fifteen years, and are now one of the most flourishing bodies in the community. Altogether in order to save our Catholic institutions I placed over $30,000 debentures in the bank all of which has been long since paid off.

It may not, however, be this transaction to which Mr. Reid alludes, perhaps it is the following: Mr. Morine became financial minister of the colony in September, 1897, in the Winter government. I had some financial associations with that government, not by way of asking a loan, as Mr. Reid states, but of a legislative grant, and not for the use of the Roman Catholic Church exclusively, but for the institution of boys' orphanages for the children of all religious denominations in the island, Roman Catholic, Church of England, Methodists and others. It will be necessary for me here also to enter a little minutely into the facts.

The subject of the establishment of a boys' orphanage or industrial school had been agitated here for a considerable number of years.

In 1897 the government of Sir William Whiteway was in power. The Hon. Robert Bond (afterwards Sir Robert) was colonial secretary. He sent a joint letter to the heads of the various religious denominations, stating that the government was desirous of establishing a home or refuge for waifs, etc., and "appreciating the difficulties surrounding the operation of a reformatory or home of refuge to children of all religious persuasions," he wished to know "if your denomination would be prepared to take charge of such children," etc., under certain conditions, which he laid down and he stated that the government was prepared to give as a legislative grant, the sum which such children cost the country when kept in the jail or penitentiary (about $104 p.a.). I at once accepted the offer on behalf of the Roman Catholic body and on Sept. 17th I wrote the government to that effect. I also stated that I had already, previous to the receipt of that offer, determined to open a boys' orphanage, even independent of government assistance and that I had already made preliminary arrangements, having bought bedsteads, etc., and secured services of the "Christian Brothers" to take charge of the institution. Before this offer could be put into operation a general election took place. The Whiteway-Bond party was defeated and the Winter-Morine party returned. It was generally understood that the incoming government would carry out the intentions of their predecessors in this matter, and the leading men among them had frequently declared they would do so if returned to power. On Monday, December 6, 1897, after the new executive had been formed with Sir James Winter as premier, I wrote to Sir James, asking if "your government are willing to concur in the proposal made by the late government?"

This letter was followed on Jan 3, 1898 by a memorial showing that the amount required would be (for our denomination) $2000 (two thousand) for the coming year, and that this amount would be at once saved to the country by the establishment of such an institution. After a delay of over two months the government which was completely dominated by Mr. Morine, sent a letter on March 18, 1898, through the Hon. J. Alex. Robinson, colonial secretary, refusing the grant. This refusal has nothing to do with my attitude towards the Winter Government, as Mr. Reid falsely states. My opposition to the policy of the party led by Mr. Morine was well and publicly known long before that refusal and was based on no personal grounds, but upon what is conscientiously believed to be for the welfare of the country. I had no "interview" or personal intercourse with Mr. Morine during the whole course of these proceedings, so that the graphic and dramatic account of the "interview" between me and Mr. Morine, given by Mr. Reid, is surely imaginary.

I may say that the legislative grant offered by the Bond Government and denied by Morine, was promptly given by succeeding governments to all denominations, i.e., Roman Catholics, Church of England Methodists, etc. Our orphanage has gone on most successfully and is in a flourishing condition, having now over one hundred boys, and possesses property in buildings, land and appurtenances valuing little short of a hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. Reid says that "I lost thousands upon thousands of dollars in connection with the business of Mr. E. M. Jackman. This is an absolute falsehood. I never had any financial or monetary dealings of any kind with Mr. Jackman, not even to the amount of one cent. I never lent him any money nor did he ever ask me for any. No doubt Mr. Jackman will know how to deal with this matter.

M. F. Howley.

GALVESTON CAUSEWAY COMPLETED

Galveston May 25—The Galveston Causeway said to be the greatest engineering achievement of its kind in America, was formally dedicated and opened to traffic today. The opening was made the occasion for a public celebration in which delegates from many Texas cities participated.

The completion of the causeway marks the culmination point of the extensive improvements projected by the city of Galveston after the disastrous storm and flood which laid a large part of the city in ruins in 1900. The causeway connects Galveston Island and the mainland. The structure is 10,642 feet long including 2,473 feet of reinforced concrete arch bridge work, a 100-foot bridge lift, 4,530 feet of causeway on the island and 3,640 feet on the mainland. The structure is 66 feet wide and provides for railroad and interurban tracks and roadways for vehicles and foot passengers. There are twenty-eight arches in the bridge, in four series of seven arches each. The causeway has been three years in building and cost $1,500,000.
