CHAPTER III.

THE girl darted a swift look at Boyd, but he fell to brooding again, evidently insensible to her presence. At length he stirred himself to ask:

"Can I hire a guide hereabout? We'll have to be going on in a day or so."

"Constantine will get you one. I suppose, of course, you will avoid the Katmai pass?"

"Avoid it? Why?"

"It's dangerous, and nobody travels it except in the direst emergency. It's much the shortest route to the coast, but it has a record of some thirty deaths. I should advise you to cross the range farther east, where the divide is lower. The mail boat touches at both places."

On the following morning Cherry told Constantine to hitch up her team and have it waiting when breakfast was finished. Then she turned to Emerson, who came into the room and said quietly:

"I have something to show you if you will take a short ride with me."

The young man, impressed by the gravity of her manner, readily consented. Constantine freed the leader, and they went off at a mad run. They skimmed over the snow with the flight of a bird.

The young man gave himself up to the unique and rather delightful experience of being transported through an unknown country to an unknown destination by a charming girl of whom he also knew nothing.

"Yesterday you seemed to be taken by the fishing business," she finally said.

"I certainly was until you told me there were no cannery sites left."

"There is one. When I came here a year ago the whole river was open, so on an outside chance I located a site, the best one available. When Willis Marsh learned of it he took up all of the remaining places, and, although at the time I had no idea what I was going to do with my property, I hung on to it."

"I can't buy your site."

"Nobody asked you to," she smiled.

"I wouldn't sell it to you if you had the money, but if you will build a cannery on it I'll turn in the ground for an interest."

Emerson meditated a moment then replied, "I can't say yes or no. It's a pretty big proposition—$200,000, you said?"

"Yes. It's a big opportunity. You can clean up 100 per cent in a year. Do you think you could raise the money to build a plant?"

"I might," he said cautiously.

"At least you can try?"

"But I don't know anything about the business."

"I've thought of all that, and there's a way to make success certain. I believe you have executive ability and can handle these men."

"Oh, yes, I've done that sort of thing." His broad shoulders went up as he drew a long breath. "What's your plan?"

"There's a man down the coast, George Balt, who knows more about the business than any four people in Kalvik. He discovered the Kalvik river, built the first cannery here and was its foreman until he quarreled with Marsh. Balt isn't the kind of man to be disciplined, so, not having enough money to build a cannery, he took his scanty capital and started a saltery on his own account. Marsh broke George in a year, ruined him, utterly wiped him out, just as he intends to wipe out insignificant me. Thinking to recoup his fortunes, George came back into camp, but he owns a valuable trap site which Marsh and his colleagues want, and before they would give him work they tried to make him assign it to them and contract never to go in business on his own account. Naturally George refused. He's been starving now for two years."

ROAD BUILDING PROBLEM IS A SERIOUS ONE

(Toronto Globe.)

Money is not everything in road-building. It is not even the chief thing. The provinces and municipalities of Canada have spent enough money on road-building and enough "statute labor" to produce thousands of miles of first-class roads instead of the few hundred miles the country possesses.

Canada needs a macadam and a General Wade if the money now being voted so freely is to prove a permanent investment. Comprehensive plans driving force, and scientific knowledge in the choice of materials are essential, and there is no evidence that they are available. Without them Quebec's ten millions, and the Dominion government's five millions, and the Ontario government's additional million will be thrown away as so many millions have been thrown away before them on the making of roads that sink out of sight after a few years' use.

The proposal of the Dominion government that the national grant for highways may be spent by the minister of railways instead of being pooled with the money of the municipalities and provinces is likely, if carried out, to increase rather than lessen the existing waste and confusion. There should be road-building boards in each of the provinces composed of representatives of the municipalities interested and the provincial authorities, with a permanent staff of the best engineers who can be secured for the work. Only under the immediate direction of competent men can the roads of Canada be improved.

There is no greater need than that of good roads. There is nothing that will do more toward improving the condition of the farming classes than road-building. But it is a far cry to Ottawa, and the Dominion government has enough to do already without seeking to direct or control either the building or maintenance of highways in the nine provinces of confederation. The money voted by the Dominion should be handed over to the provinces to be spent by competent experts.
