

Poetry.

GOOD MORNING.

"Oh, I am so happy!" the little girl said,
As she sprang like a lark from her low trundle-bed;
"This morning, bright morning!"—good morning papa!
Oh, give me one kiss for good morning; mamma!
Only just look at my pretty canary,
Chirping his sweet "good morning to Mary!"
The sunshine is peeping straight into my eyes,
Good morning to you, Mr. Sun—for you rise
Early to wake up my birdie and me,
And make us as happy as happy can be!"

"Happy as you may be, my dear little girl!"
And the mother stroked softly a clustering curl—
"Happy as can be—but think of the One
Who wakened this morning both you and the sun!"
The little girl turned her bright eyes with a nod—
"Mamma, may I say, then, good morning to God?"
"Yes, little darling one, surely you may,— Kneel as you kneel every morning to pray!"

Mary knelt solemnly down, with her eyes
Looking up earnestly into the skies;
The two little hands that were folded together,
Softly she laid on the lap of her mother.—
"Good morning, dear Father in heaven," she said;
"I thank thee for watching my snug little bed;
For taking good care of me all the dark night,
And waking me up with the beautiful light!
Oh, keep me from naughtiness all the long day,
Blest Jesus, who taught little children to pray!"

An angel looked down in the sunshine and smiled,
But she saw not the angel, that beautiful child!

THE INDIAN.—There is indeed something in the fate of these poor unfortunate beings, much to awaken our sympathy, and much to disturb our judgment. What can be more melancholy than their history? They seem destined to a slow but sure extinction. Everywhere at the approach of the white man, they fade away; we hear the rustling of their footstep like that of the withered leaves of Autumn; they pass mournfully by us, and they return no more. Two centuries ago the smoke of their wigwags rose in every valley; the shouts of victory rang through the mountains and the glades. The thick arrows and the deadly tomahawk whistled through the forests; the hunter startled the wild beasts in their lair; they had courage, and fortitude, and perseverance beyond most of the human race. They shrank from no danger, they feared no hardships, they were true to their friends and their Homes. They forgave not injuries, neither did they forget kindness. Their love like their hate stopped not this side of the grave. But where are they? They have perished; they are consumed! The winds fan not a single region which they now call their own. The smoke no longer curls around their lonely cabins, they have gone to the far West beyond the Mississippi and the Lakes. They have left but a few scattered tribes behind to mourn their departure; have passed and are passing away.—Soon we shall know them only by song.—The white man has encroached upon their hunting grounds, his axes resound in every glade. The noble forest yields to his sturdy march, the deer takes refuge in the deep recess of the forest, and the timid hare flies before her pursuers.

FASHIONABLE SOCIETY.—It is far beyond our power, and we believe much higher powers than ours, to penetrate the secret motives and latest causes that govern the different phases, aspects, and changes that influence the orbits of fashionable society. Why one star is to-day to be lord of the ascendant, and to-morrow struck from its course; why one dignity is all powerful in one set, and totally powerless in another; what rivalries are occasioned by what causes;—wit, taste, politics, party warfare, birth, and precedence court favor, to say nothing of beauty and mental accomplishments—all these have their influence, and divide the world under different chiefs. One great lady is touchante; another is piquante; another a poetess; another a blue; most of them fine. Among the gentlemen, there is the high courtier; the high whig; the giver of dinners; the giver of balls; the affable; the supercilious; the sayer of good things; the sayer of nothing; the lady's man; the talking man. Among all these, both men and women, there may be acquaintance, but not amity; intercourse, but not identity; they are separated by jealousy, avoid intimacies, and, among the fine class, covet, or, as the case may be, have a horror of introductions.—Exchange.

ECONOMY OF WIVES.—A young married woman who has not had the opportunity of profiting by the advice and example of a good mother, will find some difficulty at first in spending her money to the best advantage; for there is really an art in spending money, although it be in getting rid of it. Some women will keep house respectably and plentifully on one-third less money than will be required by others, yet without either meanness or illiberal dealing. But to do this, judgment, forethought, and experience are necessary. One woman shall be able to tell you how much her housekeeping costs to a shilling, while another cannot guess within ten. The former has method, rule, regularity, and a certain sum assigned to her; with the latter it is all haphazard—it comes and it goes, and she neither knows how, or cares. And this is almost sure to be the case if the money be doled out by her husband, instead of being given in one sum to the extent of his means.—Liverpool Standard.
