

Poetry.

I'M GROWING OLD.

The following beautiful stanzas first appeared in the Andover Advertiser—

I'm growing old—'tis surely so;
And yet how slow it seems,
Since I was but a sportive child,
Enjoying childish dreams.

I cannot see the change that comes
With such an even pace;
I mark not when the wrinkles fall
Upon my fading face.

I know I'm old; and yet my heart
Is just as young and gay
As e'er it was before my locks
Of bright brown turned to gray.

I know these eyes, to other eyes
Look not so bright and glad
As once they looked; and yet 'tis not
Because my heart's more sad.

I never watched with purer joy
The floating clouds and growing skies,
While glistening tears of rapture fell
These old and fading eyes.

And when I mark the cheek, where once
The bright rose used to glow,
I grieve me not to see it faded
The old crown upon my brow.

I've seen the flower grow old and pale,
And withered more than I;
I've seen it lose its every charm,
Then drop away and die.

And then I've seen it rise again
Bright as the beaming sky,
And young and pure and beautiful—
And felt that so shall I.

Then what if I am growing old—
My heart is changeless still,
And God has given me enough
This loving heart to fill.

I love to see the sun go down,
And lengthening shadows throw
Along the ground, while o'er my head
The cloud in crimson glow.

I see, beyond those gorgeous clouds,
A country bright and fair,
Which needs no sun: God and the Lamb
Its light and beauty are.

I seem to hear the wondrous song
Redeemed sinners sing;
And my heart leaps to join the throng
To praise the Heavenly King.

I seem to see three cherub boys,
As hand in hand they go,
With golden curls and snowy wings,
Whose eyes with rapture glow.

When I was young I called them mine—
New Heaven's sweet ones they were;
But I shall claim my own again,
When I am called away.

Perhaps, when heaven's bright gate I've passed,
They'll know from every other,
The one who gave them back to God,
And hark to call me mother.

Oh! I am glad I'm growing old!
For every day I spend,
Shall bring me one day nearer that
Bright day that has no end.

The Two Bible Readers.

A CONTRAST.

In a summer-house, in the retired garden of a pleasant country residence, there might be often seen, at an early hour of the morning, a gentle form bending over a book with an appearance of absorbing interest. The place was very fragrant, for the porch was covered with roses and honeysuckles; while a flourishing ivy made a rich, dark ground of coloring, from which the flowers rose out in beautiful relief. Birds and bees made music there, and there was everything to make it very inviting in the cool quiet of the early morning. It was not, however, merely to enjoy the sweet sights and sounds of Nature that that fair form was often found there. True, she loved this green earth, with all the beauties so liberally scattered by the divine hand; she "considered the lilies," and read lessons of wisdom from the flowers of the field; but amidst all these lovely things, of which she could exultingly say, "My Father made them all," she loved to ponder over the pages of a book more profound than that of Nature,—one which opens up to the eye of faith a fairer dwelling-place beyond the grave, and hopes of God. In the undisturbed quiet of this favourite resort did this eminent christian often study the sacred volume, from which she daily drew life, strength, wisdom, and peace; its principles were interwoven with the whole fabric of her life; in her hours of deep sorrow its promises shone upon her in all their starry brightness; in affliction she was calm, being stayed on the word of the everlasting One; from its records of the Saviour's life, on which she loved to dwell, she caught something of his spirit, and like him, too, "went about doing good." That book ever furnished her with a word in season to the weary, the sick, the dying. Already have many risen up to call her blessed; and when the light of eternity shall disclose the varied histories of earth, no doubt it will be found many others were benefited by her labours. Such was her veneration for the Bible, that it was her habit to devote to it her first attention,—no other book, however attractive, being allowed to precede "the morning portion." The words of David may be used in her case with more than any necessary force.

The life of this bible-christian was rich in deeds of love for the bodies and souls of all within her reach: the cottage and the mansion, the quiet village and the crowded alleys of the town, the female prayer-meeting and the young people's class—all have borne witness to the blessed influence of her cheerful, earnest piety.

The source of all this, next to prayer, which must ever be the mainspring of spiritual life, was a diligent study of the book of God; it was to her "a garden of delight," and while she perused its loved pages in the summer-house at early morn, her heart expanded to its sweet influence like the fragrant flowers around her to the bright, warm beams of the sun. She rejoiced and gave thanks, and went forth well armed to meet all the day might bring.

Need it be wondered that as strength failed and disease invaded the frame, this loving follower of Christ was not dismayed, and that as she approached the dark valley, all was serene?

She is now where they see not "through a glass darkly," but in full unclouded vision contemplate the beauty and glory of Him whose footsteps once trod this earth, and who left such a bright and touching example for his disciples to copy. Oh, blessed end of a close walk with God! Oh, blessed book that can conduct by its sure guidance to the perfect land where "they die no more!"

Now for another scene. In the large old town, at a little distance from which the residence just alluded to was situated, lay a gentleman in the prime of life, smitten down by disease, and under the strong inevitable grasp of the last dread foe; he requests some one to fetch a Bible and read to him, saying, "Read, read," and urging it on with great agitation as though not a moment must be lost. What is the secret of this? It does not seem to quiet him or to brighten that chamber of death, yet it is the Bible to whose words he is listening. Alas, it is soon explained; he had been an infidel, and, of course, a neglecter of the sacred page; he was now, therefore, in his extremity, a stranger to its soothing, saving power. The life of this sceptic had been spent in gaiety and dissipation, and now that death and the grave stare him in the face, he is in terror and despair, and the neglecter of the Bible asks for it eagerly, and listens to its words. This was the only ray of hope that closing scene presented. The result must be left. It may be that his soul bowed to its truth, and that mercy met him at the eleventh hour; but it is feared it was too late; he had scorned it, and now all that is known, was his urgent demand to "read, read, read on!"

Let the contrast of these two scenes speak for itself. And oh, let every one ask the inward voice,—"How am I treating my Bible now, and what will it be to me in

That inevitable day! When a voice to me shall say,—
Thou must rise and come away;
All thine other journeys past,
Gird thee and make ready fast;
For thy longest and thy last."

Let this best of books be used as an intimate friend, its daily companionship sought in prayerful, earnest study, and the life will be in some measure conformed to its model, giving forth brightness and harmony, and the dark shadow of the tomb will, by its blessed truths and promises, be gilded with celestial light.

But neglect it, disbelieve it, scorn it, and life will be unholily, unhappy, and, without a great and sudden change, death—without hope. Oh, who would not rather be like the Bible christian, than the dying deity?

The Streamlet; or, the Blessedness of a Liberal Spirit.

SEE that little fountain, away yonder in the distant mountain, shining like a thread of silver through the thick copse, and sparkling like a diamond in its healthful activity. It is hurrying on with tripping feet to bear tribute to the river. See, it passes a stagnant pool, and the pool hails it:—"Wither away, Master streamlet!" "I am going to the river to bear this cup of water God has given me." "Ah, you are very foolish for that—you'll need it before the summer's over. It has been a backward spring, and we shall have a hot summer to pay for it:—you will dry up then." "Well," said the streamlet, "if I am to die so soon, I had better work while the day lasts. If I am likely to lose this treasure from the heat, I had better do good with it while I have it."

So on it went, blessing and rejoicing in its meandering course. The pool smiled complacently at its own superior foresight, and hunched all its resources, letting not a drop steal away. Soon the mid-summer heat came down, and it fell upon the little stream. But the trees crowded to its bank, and threw out their sheltering branches over it in the day of adversity, for it brought refreshment and life to them, and the sun peeped through the branches and smiled complacently upon its dimpled face, and seemed to say, "It is not in my heart to harm you;" and the birds sipped its silver tide and sung its praises; the flowers breathed their perfume upon its bosom, the beast of the field loved to linger near its banks, the husbandman's eye always sparkled with joy as he looked upon the line of verdant beauty and its course through the fields and meadows; and so on it went, blessing and blessed of all.

And where was the prudent pool? Alas! in its inglorious inactivity, it grew sickly and pestilential. The beasts of the field put their lips to it and turned away without drinking; the breezes stopped and kissed it, by mistake, but shrunk chilled away. It caught the malaria in the contact, and carried the plague through the region; and the inhabitants caught it and had to move away; and at last the very frogs cast their venom upon the pool and deserted it, and heaven in mercy to man smote it with a hotter breath and dried it up!

But did not the stream exhaust itself? Oh, no! God saw to that. It emptied its full cup into the river, and the river bore it on to the sea, and the sea welcomed it, and the sun smiled upon the sea, and the sea sent up its incense to greet the sun, and the clouds caught in their capacious bosoms the incense from the sea, and the winds, like waiting steeds, caught the chariots of the clouds, and bore them away—away to the mountain that gave the little fountain birth, and their tiny tipped the brimming cup, and poured the grateful shower down.

And so God in heaven saw to it, that the little fountain, though it gave so feebly and so freely, never ran dry. And if God so bless the fountain, will he not bless his creatures, if, as we have freely received, we freely give?"—Teacher's Magazine.

Striking Scene at the Gaming Table.

As a company of four fast young men were busy over the card-table, a few evenings since, a singular noise attracted their attention. It was of so unusual a nature that they immediately began to look about for the cause. It was repeated in another direction. Something more than curiosity was now excited, and playing was suspended. Immediately one of the company dropped into what the Spiritualists call trance, and proceeded to utter, as from his deceased father, a homily against gambling and its associate vices. This was followed by an admonition purporting to come from a deceased sister of one of the company, couched in such terms and uttered with such sisterly feeling, that the whole group were irresistibly moved to tears. There was no more card-playing that night. None of those present were believers in spiritual manifestations, and the scene was wholly unexpected to all. Whether it was indeed spiritual, or is capable of some other solution, is a question. It was told at a religious meeting, Sunday, and we have no doubt that it occurred substantially as we repeated it.—Springfield Republican.

Agriculture.

Fruit Growing.

At a meeting of the "Fruit Growers' Society," of the western section of the state of New York statements were made by several of the members, going to show that fruit growing was the most remunerative of the farmer's labor. Dr. Sylvester, of Lyons, showed a clear profit of $175 per acre, and alluded to a neighbor's orchard which averaged $100 per acre. A. Loomis, of Byron, Genesee county, calculates from some Baldwin apples grown by his brother, that a profit of over $500 per acre has been made per annum, after making allowances for the failure of the fruit every other year. It is known that Mr. Pell, near New York, has made very large profits by shipping Newton Pippins to England, and he has devised methods which secure him fruit every year, using lime and careful pruning. Dr. Underhill states that quinces, grown for the New York market, produced him a profit of $1,200 per acre. He is on the Hudson, at Croton Point, and has made a fortune at the fruit business.

The main thing needed by the farmers, in this section, to the profitable raising of fruit, is some plan whereby they can secure a full crop every year, instead of (as now) every other year. We know of one apple orchard, of about 500 trees, in this country, which, last year, producing 2,500 bushels of apples, will not yield five bushels this fall. The product of four trees on that orchard last year, brought $80; this year the four have not produced fifty cents worth of fruit. Some method whereby this biennial barrenness may be overcome, is all that is needed by our farmers, especially those owning small farms, to make the fruit raising business profitable to them, beyond that of any other crop.—Allan Argus.

A Fact For Agriculturists.

It is not perhaps so generally known as it deserves to be, that Chloride of Lime is one of the most valuable articles available for top-dressing grass land. This substance is commonly purchased at the shops, and often at a much greater cost than the cheapness of the materials entering into its composition legitimately sanction. And, what is more important, any farmer may make it. To do this, it is only necessary to slack one barrel of good lime with water, allowing a little more water than will dry, slack it and reduce it to a thick paste. Then dissolve one bushel of common salt, using no more water for the purpose than will just take up the mineral.—This may either be used in slacking the lime, or applied after the water is used in effecting that process has been evaporated by exposure.

Chloride of lime is a perfect deodorizer, and should always be kept on hand for the use when wanted. Made in this way, it will be found to possess all the virtues of the best article from the laboratory of the chemist, and cost less than one-twentieth the price. After being made, it should be kept moist. Grass lands, top dressed with Chloride of Lime, take a much earlier start, and retain their greenness much longer than those manured with other articles. It produces, also, a very favorable effect upon cereals—wheat, rye, oats, barley, and buckwheat—and has been used with success on corn, millet and various pivoting crops.—Germanonian (Pa.) Telegraph.

THE FARMER'S LIFE.—The life of a farmer is much longer, in a general sense, than the life of an individual who resides in the city; their average age at death is 64 years, while the average of mechanics is little more than 36 years, and that of bankers is more than fifty-eight; that of public officers more than fifty-five; and that of clergyman more than fifty-five. It is stated that the average of teachers is little more than thirty-four years. We think, however, that there must be some mistake in this. The average for editors is forty, and for gentlemen sixty-eight.—The contrast is somewhat striking. Physicians, it will be observed, average nearly fifty-five years, while printers go to a trifle beyond thirty-eight. It is said that like results have attended similar examinations in England.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We take pleasure in referring to the virtue of Davis' Pain Killer. We have used the article, and found it valuable. The sale of this article in the United States is beyond all precedent, as the books of the office will show. Davis' Vegetable Pain Killer. We first heard of this medicine during a visit to the New England States, and being struck with the novelty of the title, we made some inquiry about it; and we were surprised to find that it was so generally used in the houses of most of the inhabitants of the cities and villages where we stopped, to be used in cases of sudden attacks of pain, burns, scalds, &c., and we heard it spoken of in terms of commendation, both by druggists and physicians.—Philadelphia Eagle.

Perry Davis' Pain Killer.—It is a real pleasure to us to speak favorably of this article, known almost universally to be a good and safe remedy for burns and other pains of the body. It is valuable not only for colds in the winter, but for various summer complaints, and should be in every family. The causality which demands it may come unawares.—Chris. Advocate.

Valuable Medicine.—The sale of that remarkable and truly valuable preparation, Perry Davis' Pain Killer, is constantly and rapidly increasing. During the past year the demand for this great remedy has been altogether unprecedented. Scarcely a week passes without a demand for it, and the constant sale of our acquaintance, by the use of Perry Davis' Pain Killer.—Prov. Gen. Advertiser.

ANOTHER LETTER FROM INDIA.

Messrs Perry, Davis & Son, I am happy to be able to add that your medicine is still in great demand, and consequently the demand for it is increasing. The sales at my various sub-Agencies are very satisfactory, especially in Maudslayi and Dinapore. Permet, whenever I can, to send you the reports of the sales are extensive. A party in Agia went for a supply for his personal use and that of his friends, says the demand for it is great, and recommends the appointment of an Agent there.

Mr. J. C. Barrackpore, writes under date of 20th October: "This will cost me the sum of 2 years' wages, was taken suddenly ill in the night, with a severe pain in the stomach, followed by Cholera. He found no relief until I gave him a teaspoonful of the Pain Killer, diluted with warm water; but after the expiration of a few moments, he brought up, when I repeated the dose, which partially relieved him; he followed it with a third dose, when he fell asleep, and on waking next morning he was quite fresh. I consider it a most valuable medicine to be always at hand."
