Mother, Home and Heaven. BY SUE M. SCOTT.

The words of sweetest meaning To erring mortals given— Of purest, deepest feeling, Are Mother, Home and Heaven

The magic name of mother Revives in every heart
The feelings first awakened
On that dear parent's part;
And cold must be the bosom, Devoid of love the soul, That is not moved to goodness By a mother's mild control

With home we all remember

Some vision of the past—A May-day in the morning, Too beautiful to last! When flowers of lowly beauty Beguised our youth of tears, Concealing mid the roses The thorns of riper years! Yet, when the past is challenged "Wherever we may roam," The word that is most eloquent

The Christian to the future His earnest gaze extends, While in the brightening distance The bow of promise bends! His weary feet have trodden

1s that dear one of home

The devious paths below; But now the glorious heaven With light is all a-glow-His cares are nearly over, His troubles soon will cease; For smiles of resignation

Assure us of his peace!

Of these three words of beauty.

I know not which is best-They speak of love and happine s, And one of future rest! I feel that Heaven is dearest. And yet I cannot tell, For Mother fills the heart with love, And Home has charms as well.

Then I t the three united be, Nor shall the tie be riven; For words of thrilling melody Are Mother, Home and Heaven.

Home.

There is something so endearing in the tics which weave around the early home, that every human heart feels their power. The gentle words of a mother's love, the counsels of a father's wisdom, how do they return with freshness and vividness upon the spirit, long after the lips which uttered them have mingled with the dust; and are awakened in all their power by some lit le incident, some casual word, the sight of a hand-writing, the scent of a flower. The Rev. James Hamilton records the narrative of one who unexpectedly joined with a family in the solemn service of family prayer; one who had wandered from God and truth, yet was recalled to religion and duty by this circumstance.-And was it the word of God alone, as uttered in that prayer, which subdued the proud heart of infidelity? No! he heard it not; his heart was filled with the remembrance of home. He thought of the peaceful hearth on which his own father once knell, and com mended to God his surrounding family. All the guilt which he had incurred by his foretfulness of the prayers and lessons of home rushed upon his spirit, and from that hour he sought the God of his fa hers.

And who has never felt a deep emotion at the thought of the home of his you'h? The child from home yearns for his home; the sai'or on the deep is full of thoughts of that one happy spot of earth; and whien the angry waves threaten the bark, his heart swells with the remembrance of home. The prodigal who wilfully left that home is often led back to the paths of virtue and religion, as some of its reachings are brought to the mind -And the evil and the weary wanderer -is not home to them so dear that they cannot name it but with a trembling breath? And as the moon smiles out on the scene of their exile, does not the recollection that she smiles too on their home bow down even the strong man, and bring tears into the eyes of those who are little used to weep? And the wanderer on this world's wilderness, who has found that earth has no home for him. - can any sweeter description be given to hom, or one which speaks more touchingly to his heart of a future world, than this-"There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of Gcd." A home never to change, mausion that passeth not away?

"Where burns the loved hearth brightest, Cheering the social breast? Where beats the fond heart lightest, his humble hopes possessed? Where is the smile of sadness. Of meek eyed patience born, Worth more than the eof gladness, Which mir h's bright cheek adorn? easure is marked by fleetness

To those who ever roam, While grief itself has sweetness At home, DEAR HOME!"

THE LOST PURSE

"What are you going to do with it? What are you going to do with it?" exclaimed half a-dezen ragged urchins, to a bright eyed, thenly clad newsboy, who was holding a sp'en-did purse in one of his cold, purple hands, that he had taken but a few moments previously from the sidewalk

"Return it to the owner," answered the little honest fellow in a firm tone.

" A fool! a fool!" shouted the boys, "would'nt catch us returning the purse that looked as though it had lots of money in it, as that does; let's see how much there is." said the elder of the group, and made an at-tempt to wrest it from the boy's hand.

"It shan't be opened It is none of your business what it contains, it is none of ours: and if you don't losse your grasp upon it I will call the police," returned honest Johaney n a commanding tone.

I he boys knew that Johnney would do as he had said; hence, they not only ceased tormenting him, but stole away as if the police were already on their tracks,

When alone, Johnney began to consider what it was best to do. There was no way, that he saw, by which the owner could be identified by him. A thought struck him-he would deliver it to the office of the Chief of the Police. But he should lose the sale of his papers if he attended to it then, and if he did his mother and little sister must go without bread that night; for they had nothing to eat save that which the daily sale of the newspapers brought. What should he do?
