

Mayor.—We could not help observing that not one girl in ten had the air of good health. There were very many lovely countenances—lovely with an expression of intellect and goodness—but they were like fair flowers resting upon a fragile stock. Narrow chests, round shoulders, wane forms, palid cheeks, were far too common. There was a general want in their movements of the buoyancy and vivacity of youth and childhood. The heat of the day, and the nervous exhaustion of the occasion, were to be taken into account, and due allowance should be made for them. But this was not the first time we were forced to the conclusion that here in Boston, in the education of girls, the body is lamentably neglected. As it is a very great and serious neglect, the consequences of which will not end with the sufferers themselves. Of what use is it to learn all sorts of things during the first sixteen years of life, and to stuff the brain with all kinds of knowledge, if the price be a feeble or diseased body? A finely-endowed mind, shut up in a sickly body, is like a bright light in a broken lantern, liable to be blown out by a puff of wind or extinguished by a puff of rain. If the destiny of woman were to be put under a glass and looked at, like a flower, it would be of little consequence; but woman must take her part in performing and sustaining the duties of life. These young medal scholars, in due time, will marry men whose lot is to earn their bread by some kind of toil, in which their wives must needs aid them. To this service they will bring an intelligent capacity, and a conscientious purpose; but how far will these go, without health and the cheerful spirits which health gives? A sickly wife is no help-mate but a hinder-mate. If we neglect the body, the body will have its revenge. And are we not doing this? Are we not throwing our whole educational force upon the brain? Is not a healthy city born and bred woman getting to be as rare as a black swan? And is it not time to reform this altogether? It is not time to think something of the cake as we sit at the—something of the lantern as well as the light?

Woman's Rights.

The following sensible remarks are taken from the Ohio Farmer—
We believe in woman's rights, and to prevent any misunderstanding, shall again define our position.
In the first place, as a labourer, she has a right to engage in any work to which her skill and strength are equal. There is no reason in the world why a dozen of fields of profitable employment, now shut against her, should not be opened to her taste and talent—selling dry goods, setting type, keeping accounts, engraving, designing, model making, &c. There are many such departments of labor in which she could not only succeed in making a living, but in which her success in skill and efficiency that of persons who now usually fill those places.
This right to a larger field of labor being conceded, we mention it as a second right of woman, to receive full wages for her work. It is a disgrace to a Christianized and civilized community to pay only half price, because the work has been done by a woman. We cannot conceive of a more unjust thing than to pay a woman half wages, because she is the weaker sex; and yet, with few exceptions, women will work in many kinds of labor side with men, and when evening comes he paid off in half or two thirds wages. It might be more unjust, but it could not be milder, if you required her to work for nothing. The right of every woman is to be paid equal wages for equal work with men.
Then, again, woman has rights of a wife. She has a right to her husband's business; she has a right to know his friends and habits; she has a right to know his company and respect. As a ruler of the house, she has a right to a convenient and comfortable house. One half of our wives throughout the country, live out only half of their days in health and happiness, because their kitchens are not fit to live and work in. Now, we say, woman has a right to the best kitchen that her husband can build. We doubt, whether ordinarily, a husband has any more right to put the kitchen in a seller, than he has to put his wife in the pest-house. The wife, whose days are often all spent in the kitchen, has a right to have it above ground, well-planned, fitted with conveniences of every kind for cooking, washing, ironing, &c. She has a right, and to have her daughters and domestics, to work in a clean, and convenient, well, with pumps in order; to a clothes-yard, with post for a clothes-line; &c. No man has a right to drive his "women folks," every wash-day, to fence stakes, barn doors, the neighboring orchard, or some other chance provision to fasten the wash line. Let the clothes yard have a well-kept turf, so that if a piece should get off the line, it need not always be washed over again.
Woman has rights, too, as a daughter. She has a right to as good an education as her brothers receive. She should not be put off with "reading, writing, and cyphering." We do not say she should have the same education, but we say as good an education; and if her father leaves any money when he dies, we, moreover, say that his daughters have a right to an equal share with the sons. It is a great mistake to suppose that because women don't smoke, nor chew, nor keep fast horses, nor drink, &c., that daughters need only half shares.
We would be glad to suggest another right which we think a woman is entitled to, and that is, to have something else beside factory and nonsense talked to her. We would venture to remark to our young men, that a sensible young lady is, at least, as sensible as a fool of a young man; perhaps, in some cases, even more so. Don't think yourself disagreeable if your face is not always spoiled with a smirk, a moue, or a simper. The laughing hyena is not the beautiful of every young lady. Take our advice, and venture to talk good sense, in good grammar, and with a natural voice and countenance, to the first young lady you meet; it is her right to be addressed in this way, and it is your right and duty to do it.
There are many other "woman's rights" which we might have mentioned, and of which we are advocates, but these must suffice for the present.

Mothers That are wanted.

It is a blessing and an advantage, utterly calculable, to have for a mother a woman of sense, superiority, and goodness; with force of character; with talents and cleverness; of solid information; with tact, temper, patience and skill fitted to train and mould the mind, to implant principles, and awaken a lofty and laudable ambition; and all this presided over and purified by religious faith, deep piety, and earnest devotion. These are the mothers that the church and the world alike want. The destinies of the race depend more on its future mothers than on anything else; that is to say, on the sort of women that young girls and young ladies are to be made into, or into which they will make themselves; and the sort of wives that young men will have the sense to prefer, the judgement to select, and the happiness to secure. There is nothing so little thought of by the young, and no single thing that would be in its issues of such moment, as for the one sex to remember that the are born to be the makers of future men and for the other to feel what they want in marriage, is not merely mates for themselves but mothers for their children. Clever women are of more importance to the world than clever men.
I refer, of course, not to illusive individuals on whom society depends for advance in the arts, in legislation, or in science; who extend the boundaries of knowledge, who receive and pass the torch of genius, perpetuate eloquence, or preserve truth. I refer to the culture and strength that may distinguish the general mind; the characteristics of the mass of men and women who constitute society, and from whom not only posterity, as a whole, will receive an impression, but among whom the individual hero, too, must be born and bred. On the two suppositions, that all men were clever, and all women weak, or that all the women were superior, and all the men fools, there would be by far the best prospect for the world on the latter alternative, both with respect to the general condition of the race, and the appearance of those who should be personally eminent for ability and genius. The mother has most to do with all that awakens the young spirit in its early freshness, and that makes that to be the "father to the man"; and she gives perhaps more the impress of her whole being, physical and mental, to the original constitution and capacities of her offspring. Weak men with superior wives have had sons distinguished by very high intellectual ability; but the greatest men with fools for their portion, have seldom been anything but the fathers of fools. The great Lord Bacon was the representative of one that would have been memorable and illustrious but for the gigantic and over-throwing genius of his son. His father, Sir Nicholas, was twice married; his first wife was a weak woman, and bore nothing but a poor intellectual offspring; his second was distinguished and superior; a woman of capacity, of sense, mental culture, and great energy; she was the mother of Bacon.—(Rev. T. Binney.)

TWILIGHT MUSINGS.

The last rays of twilight have faded, and our thoughts have turned from earth to that land where sorrow is a word unknown, where there is perpetual joy and gladness for evermore. This world is passing—oh so quickly! soon, soon, shall we be reunited to loved ones.
Yes, and although at times we look at ourselves, and feel to be the vilest of the vile, yet we feel to have an interest in the death and sufferings of our Saviour and Redeemer, and that eventually we shall join those who have gone before to that bright world, and we sometimes lose ourselves when we think of our friends once here on earth, and how they drooped and passed away, and we follow them, and by faith look up to the abodes of the ransomed who have come out of great tribulation and who are now engaged in harping loud hallelujahs, and paying all adoration to Him, who hung between the heavens and the earth, and cried, "it is finished."
We feel disgusted with our h's scenes, we love and admire the beautiful works of Nature, and turn from them to their Maker and G. d. and feel that the arrangement itself is perfect, and when we think of man's sin and ingratitude to the best of beings, wonder why he is permitted to enjoy the beauties that are so beautifully spread on every side. We look forward to the hour that shall destroy this earthly tabernacle, and we shall be forever at home, to the hour when this mortal shall put on immortality, when a crown of unfading glory awaits us, when we shall not be clogged with earth's fetters, when we shall awake in the likeness of Him who brought us out of the humble pit and miry clay, and put a new song in our mouth, and sometimes feel that it would be gain to us to depart and be with Christ, but we wish to acquiesce in his will and roam still longer over this stranger land if it be the will of our Heavenly Father, and feel a desire to persuade those around us to taste of his grace, and drink of the waters of everlasting life, if we could do so we should feel that our journeying through this world would be of some benefit.

Reader! 'tis no fallacy, 'tis no idle tale, that die you must, and to die with your heart unreconciled to God is not a very enviable death. Be persuaded not to put off this great and important affair until the hour of death, it may come when you are least expecting it, how many are called in an instant? how many are about their business during the day, and before midnight where are they?

Meditate upon these things, ponder them well, and let them sink deep into your heart, seek a reconciliation and put your house in order, and whether it come sooner or later, you will not have to exclaim, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul is not saved." Should you long be spared to buffet the waves of trouble as they rise, 'twill fortify your soul against the heaving surges, should losses, crosses and perplexities and cares overcast your pathway, you will find it to lighten your woes, and although your sorrows be ever so great, they will sink into comparative nothingness, if you possess that which the world cannot give nor take away. Yes, with it life's trials more easily borne, with it we are assured of a peaceful rest in heaven when our eyes are closed upon the vain scenes of death.

We need not say that without religion that any one is not happy, we know it to be so, and if you do not possess it, and would speak candidly, you would say you were really unhappy, for,
'Tis religion that can give,
Sweetest pleasures while we live;
'Tis religion must supply,
Solid comfort when we die."

Lucille.

The Philosophy of Draining Land.

The Homestead has a valuable article on drainage, in which the opinion is expressed that this operation will pay upon all lands, except sandy soils and coarse gravel, that have been underdrained by a natural process.
The advantages of draining are first, that it frees the soil from stagnant water at all seasons of the year. "Saturate the soil with water, and after a time the action of the back of the roots and the thousand little spongioles ceases, and they perish. The roots nearer the surface may keep the economy of life for a time, but it will be sickly, and the plant will be unproductive. This is the reason, that we see wet spots in cultivated fields unfruitful, the corn pury, and the potatoes half grown or diseased. The roots are suffocated. Put drains two or three feet beneath the surface, and the stagnant water passes off at once, and the air immediately follows to the drains.
Again, the soil is made porous, and spongy by this process. The effect of stagnant water is to consolidate the soil. This is seen in peat swamps. Stop the water, and the presence of the water upon the vegetable matter in the course of years consolidates into peat. Remove this pressure, by opening the drains, and it gradually softens to muck.
A loose, porous soil, secured in this way, passes off the water from heavy showers very rapidly, so that crops are never flooded or injured, as they often will be in lands usually not wet.
There is also a great mechanical advantage for the roots of plants, in this change in the texture of the soil. Much of the vigor of the plants must be wasted in overcoming the physical difficulties of procuring food in a hard, stiff soil.
Another advantage of draining is the more thorough intermixture of the manure with the soil. The favorable influence of this is seen in the more even and luxuriant growth of the crops on all parts of the field. A given amount of manure will produce much better crops, than when distributed upon a cold, hard soil.
Drained land also catches all the fertilizing materials in the rains and snows. There is an appreciable quantity of ammonia in these, which every farmer should seek to fasten in his soil. By draining land it is also benefited by the heat of rains, especially in the early part of the season—the soil is made warmer during the winter—the atmosphere penetrates the earth to a much greater depth and more completely reaches every particle; thus plant food is prepared much more rapidly, and manure imparts its virtues sooner. It in reality makes of a field a slight hot-bed, and forces and prolongs vegetation. It is equivalent to moving a man's farm several degrees further South.
These considerations are valuable, and seem abundantly sufficient to induce every intelligent farmer to try the experiment of thorough draining for himself.
