

Poetry.

For the Christian Visitor.
In Memory of Mrs. Margaret M. h. n. of Greyham.

She sat upon a low arm-chair, that stood near the fire-place,
A cambric cap was on her brow, a smile upon her face,
The little ones were hanging round, at morning, noon, and night,
To chase their childish fears away, became her chief delight,
For each she had a tender word, or look, or pious prayer: Did others grieve, she grieved with them, and strove to soothe their care.
If others slander'd absent friends, she always took their part;
Her very countenance bespoke the goodness of her heart,
Her failing faculties required some hand to be her guide,
Her loving husband fill'd that place with pleasure, and with pride, Death, the destroyer of such scenes, his usual arts employ'd;
To drive her from the old arm-chair she had so long enjoy'd, Stretched on a bed of racking pain, all healing arts were vain, Nor prayers of saints, nor nurses care, could bring her health again,
Her children crowded round her bed, and dropp'd a pining tear:
And he, the partner of her life, with soothing care was near,
Her hope was firmly fixed on him, who died upon the cross,
She knew that her Redeemer lived, and could not suffer loss,
To all she gave a look of love, then passed from human view;
To her eternal rest above where life is ever new,
Ah! who that sees a Christian die, could wish her here again?
To struggle on in this vain world, of sorrow, grief and pain?
And yet, sometimes her vacant chair will bring her looks to mind,
And cause a silent tear to start, from eyes she left behind.

THEOPHILUS.
Annapolis Royal, 7th April, 1857.

Family Circle.

A Sudden Conversion.

In one of the northern towns of Vermont lived a young man, Daniel Bryan, a lawyer by profession. No one possessed the confidence of his friends more than he did, and no one was better calculated to secure the good will and friendship of all with whom he came in contact. Business poured in upon him, and he failed not to give the utmost satisfaction.

At the age of twenty-seven, Bryan took to himself a wife from among the most favored ones of the country. Mary Felton experienced a strange pride when she gave her hand to the young lawyer; and if none envied her, many at least prayed that they might be equally fortunate.

But, ere long, a cloud came over the scene.
Conviviality ran high among the members of the bar, and Bryan possessed one of those peculiar temperaments which at length give the whole body and soul up to the demon. For three years he followed the social custom of the times without neglecting much of his business, but finally he sunk into the lowest pit of degradation. When at the age of five and thirty, he had become a confirmed drunkard.
He neglected his clients altogether, for he could not remain sober long enough at any time to carry any case through court. The only business he now had on his hands was the collection of some debts.

On the evening of his thirty-fifth birthday he joined the Washingtonians; and once more his bright genius shone out upon the world.
But it could not last long enough amid the examples of those who were his constant companions; he sank as rapidly as he had risen.
In one short year from that time he was a miserably degraded thing. People who had left notes and accounts with him to collect called at his house, and upon inquiring of his wife where he could be found, she would tell them he was away. Poor woman, they could not bear to dispute her, and they knew full well that the remains of Daniel Bryan were prostrate on his bed-room floor.

One day a Mr. Vinson went to see him.
Vinson had left notes and accounts to the amount of several thousand dollars with Bryan to collect, and he was anxious about them.
His poor wife answered him as usual—that her husband had gone away.

"My dear madam," returned Mr. Vinson,
"I know your misfortunes, and I appreciate your feelings, but I must see your husband.
If I can see him for one minute, I can learn all I want to know."

Mary Bryan spoke not a word, but with a tearful eye turned away, and Mr. Vinson followed her. He found Bryan in a back room stretched at full length upon the floor with a jug of Medford rum by his side. With much effort, Vinson aroused the poor inebriate to a state of semi-consciousness, and asked him if he had done anything with the notes and accounts which he had left with him. "Yes," answered the lawyer, in a weak, hiccupping voice, "I've deduced the per centage, and you will find the rest in that trunk." Mary's got the key.

Mary Bryan was called in the key was produced, and Mr. Vinson got his money—four thousand and some odd hundreds of dollars all right and safe.

In his worst moments, Bryan never used for himself a single penny held in trust.
Hundreds there were who worked hard to reclaim the wanderer, but without effect. Years went by, and he sank lower and lower, and yet his wife left him not. Her brother, a young lawyer, named Mos. Felton, often urged her to forsake her husband, at the same time offering her a comfortable home beneath his own roof, but she would not listen.

At length all hopes were given up. Week after week would the fallen man be drunk on the floor, and not a day of real sobriety marked his course. I doubt if such another case was known. He was too low for conviviality, for those with whom he would have associated would not drink with him.

All alone in his office and chamber he still continued to drink and even his very life seemed the offspring of his jug.

In early spring Moses Felton had a call to go to Ohio. Before he set out he visited his sister. He offered to take her with him, but she would not go.

"But why stay you here?" urged the brother.
"You are all faded away, and disease is upon you. Why should you live with such a brute?" "Hush, Moses, speak not," answered the wife, keeping back the tears. "I will not leave him now, but he will soon leave me. He can not live much longer."

At that moment Daniel entered the apartment. He looked like a wanderer from the tomb. He had his hat on, and his jug in his hand.

"Ah—Moses—how are ye?" he gasped, for he could not speak plainly.

The visitor looked at him for a few moments in silence. Then, as his features assumed a cold, stern expression, he said, in strongly emphasized tones:

"Daniel Bryan, I have been your best friend but one. My sister is an angel—but mated with a demon. I have loved you, Daniel, as I never loved man before; you were noble, generous, and kind, but I hate you now, for you are a perfect devil incarnate.
Look at that woman. She is my sister—she might now live with me in comfort, only she will not do it while you are alive; yet when you are dead she will come to me. Thus do I pray that God will soon give her joys to my keeping. Now, Daniel, I do sincerely hope that the first intelligence which reaches me at my new home, may be—that—YOU—ARE—DEAD!"

Bryan gazed upon the speaker some moments without speaking. "Moses," he at length said, "You are not in earnest?"

"As true as heaven, Daniel, I am. When I know that you are dead, I shall be happy, and not until then—so go on. Fill your jug and—"

"Stop, Moses, I can reform."

"You cannot. It is beyond your power.
You have had inducements enough to have reformed half the sinners of the creation, and yet you are now lower than ever before—Go and die, sir, as soon as you can, for the moment that sees you thus shall find me among the mourners."

Bryan's eyes flashed, and he drew himself proudly up. "Go," said he, with a tone of that old, powerful sarcasm that had often electrified a jury, "go to Ohio, and I'll send you news. Go, sir, and watch the post."

With these words Daniel Bryan hurled his jug into the fireplace, and while yet a thousand pieces were flying over the floor he strode from the house. Mary sank fainting on the floor. Moses bore her to a bed, and then having called in a neighbour, he hurried away for the stage was waiting.

For a month Daniel moved over the brink of the grave, but he did not die.

"One gill of brandy will save you," said the doctor, who saw the abrupt removal of all stimulants from a system that for long years had subsisted almost on nothing else was nearly sure to prove fatal. "You can surely take a gill, and not more."

"Aye," gasped the poor man, "take a gill and break my oath. Moses Felton shall never hear that rum or brandy killed me! If the want of it can kill me, then let me die! But I won't die; I'll live till Moses Felton shall eat his words."

He did live! An iron will conquered the messenger death had sent, and Daniel Bryan lived. For one month he could not even walk without help. But he had help—joyful help. Mary helped him.

A year passed away, and Moses Felton returned to Vermont. He entered the Court House at Burlington, and Daniel Bryan was on the floor pleading for a young man who had been indicted for forgery. Felton started with surprise. Never before had Bryan looked so noble and commanding, and never before had such torrents of eloquence poured from his lips. The case was given to the jury, and the youth was acquitted. The successful counsel turned from the court-room, and he met Moses Felton.

They shook hands, but did not speak.
When they reached a spot where no others could hear them, Bryan stopped. "Moses," he said, "do you remember the words you spoke to me a year ago?"

"I do, Daniel."

"Will you now take them back—unsay them now and forever?"

"Yes, with all my heart."

"Then I am in part repaid."

"And what shall be the remainder of the payment?" asked Moses.

"I must die an honest, unperjured man!
The oath that has bound me thus far was made for life."

That evening Mary Bryan was among the happiest of the happy. No allusion was made in words to that strange scene of one year before; but Moses could read in the countenances of his sister and her husband the deep gratitude they did not speak.

And Daniel Bryan lives, one of the most honored men of Vermont. Five times has he sat in the State Legislature; thrice in the Senate, and once in the National Congress, and he is yet an ornament of society, declining all offers of public offices, from the fact that his profession is more lucrative, while plenty of others want the offices which he cares not for.

TO BOYS WHO HAVE SISTERS.—Boys, be kind to your sisters. You may live to be old and never find such tender, loving friends as these sisters. Think how many things they do for you, how they love you in spite of all your ill-temper or rudeness, how thoughtful they are for your comfort; and be you thoughtful for theirs. Be ever ready to obey them; to perform any little office for them that lies in your power. Think what you can do for them; and if they express a wish, gratify it, if possible. You do not know how much happiness you will find in so doing. I never yet knew a happy and respected man who was not in his youth kind to his sisters. There is a beautiful song which says—

"Be kind to your sisters—not many may know The depth of sisterly love;
The south of the ocean has fathoms below
The surface that sparkles above."

CHIT-CHAT.—Naturally women talk more than men. The learned Buxtorf informs us, in his Hebrew Lexicon, that the primeval name, Eve, is derived from a root signifying Talk; and it was perhaps, from a dim idea of this kind, that the Rabbins owed their tradition, that twelve baskets of chit chat, it could not be gossip, for there were no neighbours to gossip about, were rained down into Paradise, for Adam and Eve to amuse themselves with; of which twelve Adam picked up three and Eve the other nine.—ELIZABETH SKRUTT.

GENIUS AND THE DOMESTIC TIES.—Moore laid it down as a rule that genius and domestic happiness were incompatible with, and excluded each other. One day when he asked in Wordsworth's presence, if such was not necessarily the case, the grave poet of the Lakes replied, "Men do not make their homes unhappy because they have genius, but because they have not enough genius; a mind and sentiments of a higher order would render them capable of seeing and feeling all the beauty of domestic ties."

OBITUARY.

Mr. JOHN R. CONSTANTINE departed this life May 1st, in the 38th year of his age. He received his first convictions of sin when 17 years of age in Salisbury, under the preaching of Pa-ther Crandal, but like many others never made it known till about eight years ago, when a revival was enjoyed in this place under the ministry of elder Keith. He was one of the first in that revival who followed the Saviour in Baptism; soon after this he was chosen Deacon in the Church, and continued to fill that office till he was called Home to join the Church above. About two years ago, consumption began to prey upon his lungs, and for the last five months it was evident to himself and friends that the time of his departure was near at hand. In all his afflictions he felt a firm reliance in the Lord, and bore all with Christian resignation. For the few last days of his life he was very happy, rejoicing in God, and he left the world in full assurance of a Glorious resurrection. The funeral was improved by the Rev. Caleb Spragg from Revelations 14th and 13th.

Brother Constantine has left a widow and four children, with a large circle of friends to mourn their loss; but they do not sorrow as those who have no hope.

AGRICULTURE.

CARE OF POULTRY.—No fowls can thrive, nor do themselves justice in meeting the intention of their being kept, unless some small thought and care, in providing be had for them.
In summer they need a good range, a change for scratching and burying themselves in the warm sand; and in winter, warm and comfortable shelter from the cold and snow. Nothing is so baneful to them as cold and wet; and no creatures more quickly and certainly show the good effects of proper protection, comfortable housing, and good food. Give them a warm place, warm food, and enough of it; clean water, dry sand to wallow in, and time cleanings to pick amongst, that they may not lack the raw material for the egg-shell. An occasional chance at raw meat is good for them.

ON RAISING ONIONS.—Large and superior onions may be raised by the following process. Let the farmer take his corn cobs after the thrashing, and throw them into some bye corner, to rot. After they have become thoroughly rotted, haul them on to the place designed for onions, and let them be thoroughly mixed with the soil. Or they may be thrown into a cauldron and burned, and the ashes scattered on as aforesaid.
Then take and mark rows eighteen inches apart, running north and south, to admit the sun, and the free use of the hoe. Papers of seed purchased at the store, labelled large red onions, are the right kind to sow. The seed should be buried one-half or three-fourths of an inch deep, and the soil be well pressed down upon them. The best time to sow is from the 15th to the 30th of April. A top dressing of ashes after the seed has come up, is of especial benefit. The soil may afterwards be kept rich by applications of composition from the stable, henroost, hog pen, &c.
The writer, by this process, has raised onions weighing from 16 to 18 ounces, for the two last years, and received premiums at our Town Fairs therefor; and I might add, they were far superior in size to any that were shown, and excited the admiration of the spectators.—Am. Farm.

COMPOST.—At every opportunity collect material for compost heap. It is almost incredible what amount of fertile matter may be accumulated in one season, by industry. All the waste matter about the barn and dwelling house; the bones, refuse straw, weed, scraps of old leather, cloth, bristles, horns, hoofs of cattle, &c., should be carefully saved and placed in a heap. Loam, muck, the scrapings of the door yard—which every true farmer desires to see neat and unencumbered —should also be added. "Economy is wealth," says the old adage, and in no department of it is it more essential and indispensable than in that of farming.

UNION HOTEL, Union Street.
Between Charlotte and Sydney Streets, (South side.)
The Proprietor of the Establishment, has had the favour received during the period he occupied the New Brunswick Hotel, and convinced of the necessity of more and better accommodation for the public, has erected a large and substantial Building in Union Street, capable of accommodating from 70 to 80 Boarders. This house is well ventilated, the sleeping rooms are large, and every flat is well supplied with water, and also lighted with gas. The proprietor is determined to leave no means untried to merit the patronage of the community. Travellers arriving late at night will find the house always open, and ready to receive them; while the convenience and moderate charges will render it emphatically the home of the stranger. The tables of the house will be supplied with the best market affords, and the Proprietor is determined to adhere strictly to the Total Abstinence principle. [?] Two large Stables have been erected on the premises, capable of accommodating 60 or 70 horses. Good hostlers always in attendance.

FACTS Speak Louder than Words!
Rich's Safes—None to equal them.

THE following is one of the late Certificates which the manufacturers have received, and which, as we who require Safes should read, in order to satisfy themselves that there are no Safes made which stand so high in the City of New York as RICH'S IMPROV-EMENT VALUABLE PATENT, and which already reach over THE THOUSAND (10,000) sold; over 500 to Banks, Railroad, and other Joint Stock Companies; 1500 in New York City; and 1000 in New Orleans. Amongst the purchasers are the Montreal Bank, Montreal; Second Bank, Montreal; at Quebec, Montreal, and Toronto; House of Assembly, Legislative Council, and Receiver General, Canada.

THE FOLLOWING IS THE CERTIFICATE.
To the Editors of the Daily Times, Montreal:
We deem it due to our neighbours, and to Messrs.
Stearns & Marvin in particular, to state that their books and papers were in one of their SAFES, which stood in the fourth story of our store, No. 38, Murray Street, and which with its entire stock of goods was consumed on the 9th inst. The Safe fell through to sub-cellar, where it remained over 30 hours before it was possible to recover it! At the end of that time we had the pleasure of taking out our books and papers in an entirely legible condition; and feel that after passing successfully through such an intense heat, too much cannot be said in praise of their Safes.
Respectfully,
MARTIN & BROTHER,
44, Courtland Street
New York, Nov. 11th 1856.

These celebrated Safes are made with WILDER'S PATENT FILLING, and not filled with sawdust, as common, chalk, or alum, as re-others who are known to be worthless; therefore, those who are in want of Safes had best make themselves fully acquainted with all before purchasing. For sale by
