

roses in the centre of the corsage. A superb set of diamonds was worn with this dress, and the head dress, consisting of diamonds and lace, with white roses set in the folds on each side. A matronly lady, was attired in a dress of brilliant white satin. It was trimmed with point de applique, set off with a white fluffon bertha, and with diamonds on either shoulder and in front, and a golden cord running in loops around it. Two fountains of application lace, and a chachela on the right completed the dress. The diamonds which adorned the bertha, cost the sum of $1,000.

One young lady was attired in a gossamer-like dress of white illusion, with puff skirt, the under skirt being of beautiful white silk, the whole tastefully ornamented with flowers. The bertha was of the same material as the skirt, and a beautiful sash confined the waist, terminating in two broad ribbons of white silk, the ends of which were embroidered with flower patterns. This dress was valued at about $200.

A lavender colored dress of moire attire was one of the finest of the evening. Six illusion flounces, arranged in a pyramid ran round the lower half of the skirt, the point of each loop being set with white roses. The bertha was a beautiful combination of white illusion and white application lace, adorned with white flowers.

One of the most tasteful dresses was of violet green, heavily covered by a tulle of point applique, looped up with bow and ends of white ribbon, decorated with silver, in the center of the bow was a little cluster of white flowers. A lace scarf was gracefully disposed over the corsage, and fastened under the arms with bow, and ends of ribbon, matching the garniture of the skirt; short full caps of silk, over lace puff, trimmed with ribbon and flowers; gloves ornamented with lace and flowers; pearl bracelet and pearl-headress completed the toilet.

We give these merely as specimens. There was much splendor which passed away unseen, not only because the crowd was so great, but it was impossible to see anything, but because few cared to see anything but the Prince.

Arrival of the Prince of Wales in Boston.

HIS PROGRESS FROM ALBANY.

INCIDENTS ON THE ROUTE.

RECEPTION OF THE PRINCE AT LONGWOOD.

ENTHUSIASTIC ENTREE INTO THE METROPOLIS.

The Prince of Wales arrived in this city yesterday afternoon, after a pleasant journey from Albany, having on Tuesday been the guest of Gov. Morgan of New York, who gave a supper that evening at Congress Hall in honor of his Lordship.

Yesterday morning the Prince and suite left Albany for this city. They were escorted to Greenbush by the Albany Burgess Corps, which turned out with full rank. They took passage in a special train over the Western Railroad.

ARRIVAL AT SPRINGFIELD.

At Springfield the spacious depot was filled to overflowing long before the Prince arrived, by citizens of that city, including a large number of ladies, and when the gayly appareled locomotive entered the station, a shout of welcome went up which did not cease until the Prince stepped out up in the platform, when he received a cordial and respectful reception.

OFFICIAL WELCOME TO THE STATE.

At Springfield Col. J. N. Newell, A. Thompson, and H. B. Sargent, of the staff of Governor Banks, commissioned by His Excellency to extend to the Prince a welcome on behalf of the State, were in waiting to discharge their pleasant duties.

Immediately upon the arrival of the train they stepped on board and entering the saloon of the Prince, Col. Thompson presented the joint card of himself and Col. Sargent, and also a letter of introduction from Gov. Banks to Lord Lyons.

A LUNCH IN THE CAR.

By the excellent arrangements of the car, occupied by the Prince, he was enabled to take dinner while the train was in motion. The attendants were making preparations to spread a collation when the train entered the depot at Springfield, and soon after the cars were underway again the Prince and suite and his guests sat down to a lunch of cold meat and tongue, and omelette. The Prince designated the places for the guests, seating the Marquis de Lonsdale opposite to himself, Col. Lawrence on his right, and the gentlemen of his suite at their respective places.

FROM SPRINGFIELD TO WORCESTER.

The train left Springfield at twenty-five minutes past 12, amid the cheers of the multitude. As the train passed the residence of Mr. Conductor Adams, who came down from Albany, a salute was fired, and again in passing the United States Arsenal, the Prince was honoured with a salute by Col. Wright, the Superintendent.

As the train swept past the several stations between Springfield and Worcester, there were crowds of eager spectators and shouts of welcome, which greeted his course through the "Heart of the Commonwealth."

At Palmer, the depot was thronged with people who gazed about the car of the royal party, and as the train moved away again, the ladies waved an adieu from the platform, and the streets in the vicinity.

ARRIVAL AT WORCESTER.

The train reached Worcester at 2:10 P. M., and passed through a dense mass of people—computed at from five to ten thousand—who were assembled on both sides of the track, on the platform of the depot and on the roof, the whole presenting an animated scene. No sooner had the train stopped than a rush was made for the Prince's car, but by the well directed efforts of the police of Worcester the crowd were kept back. They gazed loudly for the Prince, who responded by waving upon the platform, in view of the multitude, who greeted him with their cheer of welcome.

AT LONGWOOD.

Here the city authorities received the Prince. Mayor Lincoln entered the saloon car, and being at once recognized by the Prince, His Royal Highness came quickly forward, and extending his hand to the Mayor greeted him with the warmth of an old friend. The two had previously met in Halifax. The Prince left the car on the arm of Mayor Lincoln, and after the presentation of Mr. Everett, Mr. Winthrop and others, he walked down the platform and took a look at his locomotive namesake, which had brought him safely and rapidly over the road, and expressed his admiration of its appearance.

The Prince and suite, the Committee of the city Government and others, then ascended the steps and took carriage in waiting for them. The scene about the station was animated by the presence of a large and brilliant assemblage of the ladies of Longwood, Brookline and the vicinity besides many who had rode out from the city to meet the Prince. These waved him a cheerful welcome.

THE ESCORT TO THE CITY.

The honor of escorting the Prince and suite from Longwood devolved upon the first battalion of Dragoons, consisting of the National Light Cavalry, Capt. Fellows, 108 men; the Boston Light Dragoons, Capt. Pierce 70 men, and the Walworth Light Dragoons, Capt. Moore, 50 men the whole under the command of Major White of the second Battalion. The procession was preceded by a guard of mounted police, after which came the Mayor's Band. The cavalry opened and received the guests in open barouches.

The procession moved to the music of national airs of England and America, passing through Longwood, the wealthy residences of which locality greeted the illustrious stranger as he passed. As the Prince entered Roxbury he was welcomed by the citizens with a national salute, fired by a detachment of the Roxbury City Guard. The streets through which the procession passed were filled with people; there were people everywhere on the sidewalks, in the doorway and windows on the fences and house-tops, children waving their handkerchiefs. The most respectful hearing was evinced by all toward the Prince, who could not fail to have been impressed by the multitudes which thronged every avenue through which he passed.

As the procession approached the city, the crowd increased in numbers and brilliancy. The windows of the lofty residences on Washington street were filled with ladies, balconies were resplendent with beauty, and the entrances and steps leading up to the dwellings resembled banks of variegated flowers. The number of the throng, the richness and variety of the dresses, the enthusiastic welcome which greeted the Prince, combined to produce an effect never to be forgotten.

Boston was all ablaze with political jubilation on Tuesday evening, the metropolis was generally all excitement to see the Prince. The scene on Washington street, above Chestnut Park, and again near Canton street, was magnificent, and at different points along the route the exhibition of ladies, the flutter of handkerchiefs and flags, produced a splendid effect. As the procession neared the Revere House, the crowd formed a solid phalanx, through which the procession found it difficult to force a passage.

The Prince received the Revere House at half past 5 o'clock, and passed at once to his apartments.

A MOST BRUTAL MURDER.

The following account of a most outrageous murder, which was committed in Sheffield street in this city, last week, is extracted from the Freeman of the 23rd inst:

THE INQUEST.

VERDICT OF "WILFUL MURDER" AGAINST WILLIAM MUMFORD.

On Saturday an Inquest was held by the Coroner and a Jury on the body of the colored woman Emily Anne Jackson. The body had been removed to the dead house, where it was viewed by the Jury, and afterwards the post-mortem examination was made by Dr. Edwin Bayard and Dr. Christie.

Quadrant Painter, a small middle aged woman, was the first witness. She lived in the same tenement with the deceased. She said she saw a great deal on and off the deceased. He was in the house on Thursday night, and they remained there together until between 11 and 12 o'clock, in a room occupied by Jane Robson. They then went out together, and stayed out until about daybreak, when they returned. When they came in Jackson sat on a box in the kitchen. She appeared to be under the influence of liquor. Mumford appeared quite sober. Jackson was in the habit of drinking, but was not often drunk. After she sat down Mumford struck her on the head with his open hand or fist, witness could not say which, and said he had a spite in her. After this Jackson went into her room off the kitchen, and Mumford followed her. The door was closed, witness could not tell by which of them. After that she heard Mumford beating Jackson. She heard him knock her head against the wall. The beating continued for about 20 minutes. Jackson called for the watch as loud as she could, but none were near.

Witness, who had the care of an infant, was afraid to go into the room. She did not look in to see what took place there. Some time after Mumford dragged Jackson out of the room into the kitchen. Witness saw him make several kicks at her about the chin and breast, but could not tell if he struck her. He then got a scissor and cut off some of her hair. Jackson asked him not to cut any more off of it. He said he had not done with her yet. She lay on the floor, and asked witness and Delilah Williams to take her and lay her on the bed. She was not able to go in. They did as she desired. Mumford stopped some time in the kitchen. He said he would finish her, and he went into the room, and witness again heard the noise of beating, and heard Jackson cry out once. He left the room again. Jackson called to witness for a drink of water. Witness went in, and was talking to her. Mumford said they were talking about sending for a watchman, and he would not witness as he had served Jackson if she was not quiet. He then fastened the room door with a rope, and kept witness in for about five minutes, after which he let her out. He remained in the room, and lay on the bed near Jackson. When next witness saw Jackson—about an hour after this she seemed to think it was she was laying on the floor bleeding at the mouth. She had herself got out of the bed. She said she could not stay in it. Mumford still lay on the bed. Witness stayed with her some time. She died between 9 and 10 o'clock. No one but Mumford was in the room when she died. Witness gave no alarm to any one. Jackson had no marks or cuts on her face before Thursday night. The policeman came in she thought about 10 o'clock.

Delilah Williams slept on that night on the kitchen floor, next Jackson's bed room. She saw Jackson and Mumford in Robson's room when she went to bed. In the morning Painter woke her and told her that Mumford was beating Jackson. She got up. Her bed was near the bedroom door, and the door was on an open, and she saw Mumford beating Jackson, who lay at this time doubled up in the bed with her feet downwards, and Mumford was jumping upon her and kicking her. He had his boots on; he had boots with long laces. (The boots found on the plaintiff were produced. They are heavy cowhide boots with thick soles, and there were on them red spots, which the policeman thought were blood marks.) Witness could not swear these were the boots but they were like them. Witness saw Mumford jump on her shoulders or back twice. Jackson cried out, "O Lord, Billy, don't kill me," and more in that way. Every time he would kick her or hit her or jump on her he would curse her and say, "I'll make you tell anything on me." He dragged her into the kitchen, and then began to cut her hair off. He left her lying on the floor, and witness and the woman Painter took her in and laid her on the bed. Mumford then opened Jackson's box, and took out a trowsers and a vest and a silk skirt and made down a fire in the stove and burned the clothes. He said that after he had done this he would finish Jackson. He staid some time in the kitchen, and then went back to the bedroom. He said when he was going in he would not hurt her any more. Witness went out soon after that. She told the people all round of what had taken place. When next she saw Jackson she was lying on the floor, drawing long breaths every twenty minutes. First, she thought she was dying, and afterwards she thought she was not. She did not stand over her all the time, and could not tell when she died. Mumford was lying on the bed.

Dr. Edwin Bayard made the post-mortem examination. There were several injuries on the head. Both eyes were blackened, and the ear was injured, &c., but the brain was in a healthy state—very slightly congested indeed. There was the mark of a blow or kick under the chin. There were marks of violence on her neck chest and arms. On the right side and back there was great discoloration, as if produced by a severe blow, and there was ecchymosis under the skin. The chest, on opening it, proved to be sound, the ribs were not broken, and the viscera were in a healthy state, except some slight adhesion of the pleura, but the right lobe of the liver in the place corresponding with the outer discoloration was completely shattered, burst right through, the rent being about six inches by four, all jagged at the edges. It could be described as completely burst, in the abdominal cavity they found a very large quantity of blood, at least two or three quarts. There could be no doubt that the injury to the liver was the cause of death, and that it was produced by some heavy blow. It was precisely such an injury as would be produced by a heavy kick. There was considerable extravasation in the intercostal muscles where the discoloration appeared.

The Jury found a verdict of Wilful Murder against the prisoner, William Mumford, who was in court during the greater part of the investigation. He was very pale, but seemed either very stolid or quite stupefied. He had counsel employed, who, however, merely took notes of the evidence, and once or twice asked to have the Coroner's notes read.

On Monday morning three houses, the property respectively of Messrs. Cashman, Pegan and Brookings, situated on the road near the Abolition, and opposite the Hay Market, were destroyed by fire. They are said to have been all insured.

Mr. Hill, formerly Editor of the Head Quarters, died at F. ederickton a few days since.

Naples mainly confined to details of battle of Voltorno. Neapolitans estimated 30,000 strong attacked Garibaldi's first, under cover of thick mists, carried some positions, and for a time succeeded in driving back Garibaldi's, whose numbers did not reach half theirs. Garibaldi went forward, revolver in hand. After desperate fight of eight hours duration Neapolitans were broken and routed, and were pursued under walls of Capua, and brigade of Germans was cut off and driven to the mountains. Garibaldi's took 5,000 prisoners. It is estimated Neapolitans had 3,000 killed and wounded, and Garibaldi's 1,200 to 2,000. Royalists subsequently made sortie to rescue German brigades but were repulsed. The King of Naples and his brother were present in the battle.

Rumors current that Capua had surrendered, but bombardment was progressing—neither confirmed.

Line of Voltorno still strongly protected, and it is said Neapolitans are prepared to defend their positions. Some Sardinian troops assisted Garibaldi's. Garibaldi has called on King of Sardinia to send to Naples and send him 14,000 men immediately. Piedmontese had entered Neapolitan territory. Reported that three great powers had protested.
