CHRISTIAN LOVE AND LOYALTY; OR. THE REBEL RECLAIMED.

XIII. WARNING.

Beareth all things.

Liberia pictured to herself Grace Vernon, rolling along in a coroneted carriage, drawn by four beautiful bays, little dreaming that her envied companion was now a lonely, anxious captive, watching her own movements from the height of Nina's Tower! Grace saw that Liberia was pacing the shrubbery with rapid steps, looking neither to the right nor to the left, as if something disturbed her mind; but the prisoner was too high above Braburn's daughter to be able to detect any trace of agitation upon her face. Grace in her captivity was less to be pitied than Liberia in her freedom. Partly by the leadings of God's providence, partly by the teaching of his Spirit, Nina's child had already learned something of the art of bearing and forbearing, which is so needful to a Christian. Untempered steel snaps in the proof; it is that which has been subjected to the furnace and the chill which endures to be bent without breaking, and acquires tenfold usefulness and tenfold value from the trials to which it has been subjected.

Grace had not watched Liberia for many minutes when her attention was directed from her to some moving figures, which, while completely hidden from any one below by the slope of some rising ground, were distinctly visible to the captive from the commanding height of the Tower. Grace saw a party of soldiers, under an officer's command approaching Braburn Castle, with what appeared to be measures of precaution. She saw the leader with uplifted arm, point to the Castle before him, then divide his troops into two equal bands, of which one turned to the left hand, while he led the other to the right. No loud command was given, nor did the soldiers appear like troops drawn out for parade, but each man looked to the priming of his musket, as if preparing for actual service, before commencing his silent march towards Braburn Castle.

"What can bring these solders hither?" thought Grace; "these are no volunteers, they wear the red uniform of the regular troops of the king! No foe is near; I have been looking over the sea-not a suspicious sail is to be seen between us and France. One would think, from the movements of these bands, that their object was to surround the Castle and take those in it by surprise. And may it not be so?" faltered Grace, as, bending forward on her knees, and leaning her hand on the strange battlement, she | Picture Reward Cards; gazed upon the martial lines, without letting herself be seen from below : "does not the Castle hold a traitor? may not the troops be sent to arrest Mr. Braburn, even upon the threshold of his Bible Atlas and Gazetter; home ! Oh! that I could warn him of his dan ger !"

With her forehead resting on her clasped hands, and her eyes now bent on the soldiers, now on Liberia, who was still restlessly pacing below, Grace anxiously revolved in her mind by what means she could contrive to give intelligence to Jaspar. From her tower she could not descend; and were she to raise her voice loud enough to make it reach the ears of Liberia, she might also Le heard by the soldiers who were advancing on their march. Every minute strengthened the conviction of Grace that they were coming to arrest Mr. Braburn-every minute might be precious as affording him time to escape. Suddenly Grace started from her kneeling posture, hurried to he ladder, and descended it even more rapidly than she before had done. She caught up the loaf which Jasper had left, and carried it back with her to the roof of the tower. Its smooth side served her for a tablet, a bit of wood for a pen, the dark mixture of pitch and gunpowder in the brazier she used as ink. With these her rade implements for writing, Grace scrawled the scarcely legible words, " Tell your father without delay that soldiers are surrounding the castle." Relieved, after she had finished the writing, to see that Liberia had not yet quitted the shrubperv. Grace raised her arms on high, and flung the loaf over the battlements of the Tower. Down fell the strange missive into the midst of some thick bushes, several yards behind Liberia. Grace saw the girl start at the sudden rustling noise, stop in her walk, and turn round. Very anxiously did the captive watch her movements, and es. scarcely could Grace refrain from calling out, "Look to the left-look in the bushes!" Happily the call was not needed. The curiosity of Liberia was all on the qui vive, and she knew that the sound which she had heard was not the rustle of the wing of a bird. To the joy of Grace, Liberia went to the bushes, from which she soon emerged with the loaf in her hand. Then Grace beheld her looking wonderfully around and above her, as if to ascertain whence the mysterious writing could have come. The captive took care to keep herself concealed : for contempt for and neglect of her companion had become so habitual more likely to be disregarded if known to be

Liberia gazed again at the loaf in her graspwalked a few steps towards the castle, paused, turned back, seemed uncertain which way to go, and kept Grace in a state of feverish impatience by her evident irresolution. The young captive could not guess all that was passing through the • mind of Braburn's proud child.

"If I carry this strange, absurd message to my father, come I know not from whence or from whom, what will he think of my doing so? He has just said that I talk like an idiot, will he not say that I act like one? I will not expose my self to the chance of being so spoken of again! Liberia felt half-inclined to fling the loaf down on the ground. " and if soldiers be coming, what of that? We have food in our larder, and wine in our cellar-they can require nothing but refreshment. But this missive, so sudden, so urgent, does it look like a warning? May it not be of importance? What if I should injure my father by concealing it? May it not be part of Oxford styles. Fine French Call Boots will be kept always that mystery which I am trying to unravel? May it not be best to carry the loaf to papa, not as 'though I thought any thing of it-any thing serious I mean—but as if I imagined that some one latest and most approved styles, such as will gratify the had been playing a practical joke? But I hate returning to the room until my father himself comes to see me! He knows that he has been harsh—he will—better leave him to take the first that he will—better leave him to take the first latest and most approved styles, such as will gratify the tasts, fit the foot, and be durable as well. To their Wholesale Customers they would say that their Manufactory is now complete, having been fitted up the past winter with new machinery of the latest and most approved styles, such as will gratify the tasts, fit the foot, and be durable as well.

To their Wholesale Customers they would say that their manufactory is now complete, having been fitted up the past winter with new machinery of the latest and most approved styles, such as will gratify the tasts, fit the foot, and be durable as well.

Thus pride and filial affection drew Liberia in opposite directions. Well was it for her future peace that pride, for once, did not triumph! . (To be Continued.)

SEPULCHRE-CEMETERY .- The word sepulchre, comes from sepelio, to bury. It is the place where the dead body of a human being is consigned, whether it be in the ground or an excavation in the rocks.

The word cemetery comes from koimao, to sleep. It is the sleeping place. Christianity has turned the sepulchre into a cemetery; assuring us as it does, that those who die in Jesus, sleep in Him, awaiting a future awakening, in augmented vigor and renovated powers. To the Christian the grave should be associated with the idea of "calm and undisturbed repose" after a life of toil, with the hope of a blessed resurrection.
