XIII. WARNING. Beareth all things.

"I will not bear it !" exclaimed Liberia, as she passionately paced up and down the shrubbery-walk, hot tears bursting from her eyes-tears which she angrily dashed aside, as if she were ashamed of giving way to the weakness of weeping.

And what had raised such a storm in a soul over which life's rude blast never had blown ? what was this trial which passed the endurance of one accustomed to have all her wishes forestalled, and all her fancies humored ?

Only a few impatient words from a too-indulgent father! Jaspar had laid no yoke of parental discipline upon his daughter; and the yoke of a Heavenly Master she had never taken upon herself. Thus Liberia started and shrank from the slightest pressure of a burden. The smallesst trial was intolerable to her unbroken spirit, and a hasty rebuke-even if merited --- was resented as a cruel insult.

Having finished reading "The Merchant of Venice," which had so much interested her on the previous evening, Liberia had again turned her thoughts to her mysterious visit to Judith, and stronger and stronger grew her desire to know the contents of the basket which she had brought from the smuggler's home. Perhaps the story which Liberia had just been perusing of three caskets, one of which contained that which would insure the fortune of him who should choose it, threw a romantic interest over the woven rushes which concealed something-what could it be ?- which might affect the fate of her parent.

So much was Liberia engrossed by her wish to coax his secret out of her father, that she scarcely noticed the strange disappearance of her youthful companion. Liberia met Mr. Braburn at the breakfast-table with her curiosity on the rack, and could scarcely attend to her tea making duties, in her eagerness to draw him into conversation. She spoke of Judith, she spoke of smuggling, and skirted around the subject which she was at first afraid openly to approach ; but when she found it impossible to draw from Jaspar any clue to the mystery which perplexed her, Liberia made a bold dash at her object, and threw her reserve aside.

"Papa-do you know- I've been making a thousand guesses as to what old Judith could possibly have sent you in that basket?"

A quick frown passed over the brow of Jaspar, and he said, with a sternness of manner which he had often shown towards Grace, but rarely towards Liberia : " There is nothing so contemptible as curiosity, and I shall certainly not gratify yours."

Liberia felt both disappoinced and hurt by her father's reply, but it had the effect of making her more determined than ever by some means to find out the secret. Seeking some one on whom to vent her rising ill-humour, and missing her who was usually its object, Liberia exclaimed, in a peevish Bible Atlas and Gizetter; tone : "What on earth has become of Grace, I have not seen her this morning? does she expect us to keep breakfast waiting for her ?"

some face of James R ----- would have supposed for a moment that he was a drunkard, and loving friends carefully concealed the fact from the world. Business by slow degrees was given up; seldom was his hand steady enough to guide his pen, or his brain sufficiently clear to add up the columns of the ledger. Time wore away, and one day to the astonishment of many, he was picked up in the public street, and brought home in a beastly state of intoxication to his afflicted friends. Ere long they consigned all that remained of James R----- to a drunkard's grave. The tempter came to him disguised in a pleasing dress, and he fell a victim to his seductions. What an amount of good might he have accomplished, had he resisted the evil, through strength given him from God! How many young men are to-day sipping their first glass ! It may have been recommended by a physician, to ward off sickness; but if followed by others, it will bring disease and death -aye, death eternal-to its victim. Then be careful of the first glass. Resist the temptation, in whatever form it presents itself. Remember the fearful words reorded in the holy Scriptures, that the drunkard shall not " inherit the kingdom of God."

When once we practice to deseive !

Jaspar felt himself involved in meshes of difficulty and to prevent a search for Grace, thought himself obliged to have recourse to a miserable falsehood.

"She was sent for by her aust," said the wretched man, blushing as he uttered the untruth. Sent for by her aunt-byLady Laurie ? when-how-where ?" cried Liberia, excited as well as as tonished by the news.

Braburn could not look lis own child in the face. "What does it matter to you ?" he said harshly ; ". wish that her aunt would keep her altogether; don't talk any more of Grace Vernon,"

Liberia was surprised at the manner of her father, and anxious as she was to givn further information, she dared not press him for it at that moment. For a while nothing more was said, though the thoughts of the girl were vibrating fike a pendulum between the smuggler's mysterious errand, and the sudden departure of Grace. At last Liberia said, rather as uttering her thoughts aloud, than as if addressing her father. " Grace must have gone off in wonderful haste, for she not only never bade me 'good bye'ungrateful thing that she is !---but she left her beau tiful new book lying on the shrubbery-walk ! I picked it up, and under it, was it not strange"-here Li beria addressed Mr. Braburn-" under it were several small feathers and some of them were stained with blood. Why, papa, you are cutting the tongue to pieces, and there ! oh ! you've overturned all your tea!" Distracted by her questions, each of which was as vinegar poured on a wound, Mr. Braburn knew not what he was doing ; he was only conscious of a strong inclination to throw down the table, and make his escape from the room !

" I'm sure that something has come over us all !" cried Liberia; "I wonder what is going to happen ! I was awakened this morning by the report of a gun, and if my window had looked on the sea. I would have been at it in a second, for I really took it into my head that the French had landed on the island." "Liberia ! you talk like an idiot," exclaimed Mr. Braburn, whose powers of endurance were exhausted. Such words had never before been addressed to the haughty girl, and she could not endure them, even from a father ! With indignation flashing from her eyes, Liberia rose from the table, and, without trusting herself to utter a sentence, walked out of the to all who will favor them with a call. room with the air of an insulted empress. It was felt the scalding tears falling like rain upon her refunded. may 4-vp

. " So unkind-so harsh-so unjust ! What have I done to deserve such treatment ? I cannot, and will not bear it !" Keen jealousy lent its sting yet further to irritate the angry spirit. "There is Grace Vernon, petted and pampered, raised above her proper position, promised all manner of pleasures and honors, while I am left here in this dullest of homes ! and, as if this were not enough to drive me wild, my own father is turning against mel. He might remember that all the happiness of his motherless gir! rest upon him-that unkindness and injustice from one that it loves is enough to break a young heart? Liberia might, herself, have recollected that she was only receiving in some small measure what she hed on had meted out to another ; that towards Grace, onkindness and injustice had been the rule and not the exception. Liberia knew not-for how mercifully is a yeil drawn before the events of the future !-- what much sorer trials she would have to bear before the
