CHRISTIAN LOVE AND LOYALTY; OR, THE REBEL RECLAIMED.

XII.

THE LONELY CAPTIVE.

Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth.

Continued.

The second thought of Grace regarding her step-father had been more just than the first. There had been a struggle between right and wrong in the bosom of Jaspar Braburn. Swaying backwards and forwards from one point to its opposite, he had now, with generous indignation, repelled the idea of treason; then suffered tempters without and within to master both reason and conscience. The moment after Jaspar had let loose the carrier-pigeon, he had felt as if he would give the world to be able to summon it back! When he had seen it fall, his first emotion had been that of relief, as if some invisible hand had done that which he fain would have done with his own. Then the sight of Grace approaching the dead bird, and the dread lest she should discover his secret, had turned the current of Braburn's feelings, and had made him descend the staircase, almost at a bound, to prevent the exposure of his treason!

Various influences had been at work to drive Jaspar into a course of action which his conscience abhorred. As the reader learned in a former chapter, his sympathies had early been enlisted by the struggle carried on in France between what he deemed the oppressed and their oppressors. This was the case with many honorable men in our country, whose eyes were only opened to the evils of anarchy, by the horrors of the French Revolution. But Jaspar's pride could not stoop to own that his judgment had ever been in error; he considered it base to desert a cause that he once had openly favored, preferring the name of consistency, to a reputation for common-sense.

Then Jaspar became a disappointed man. Having a high idea of his own merits, he was provoked by the indifference with which his countrymen regarded them. He had resolved to rise—and he had not risen! Jaspar began to nourish a deep sense of wrongs that had never existed. It was gratifying to vanity to conclude that the mean envy of others kept him down—and not any fault of his own. Braburn persuaded himself more easily than he could persuade the world, that the Government had shamefully neglected him. The minister must be worthless, for he had not discovered the worth of Mr. Braburn; he must job with his appointments, for no appointment had ever been offered to Jaspar! Braburn could not endure to see others in the sunshine, while he was left in the shade. Thus, mean jealousy, born of selfish vanity, took such possession of his mind, that he began actually to rejoice in the evils brought on his country by war! Jaspar foretold disasters from "the incompetent—the jobbing—the madness" of the ministry whom he detested, and found a wicked pleasure in believing that his predictions would be verified soon.

Yet, notwithstanding all the prognostications of Jaspar, Britain's armies were not cut to pieces, her navy destroyed, nor her throne overturned! The prophet of evil was found a false one; and when patriots rejoiced at returning peace, Jaspar's countenance was clouded with gloom. He however, comforted himself for the peace of Amiens by marrying Nina Vernon, and tried to forget, in domestic comfort, the failure of his political career. Jaspar's wedded happiness lasted for even a shorter time than the peace; and as has been mentioned, he visited France to solace, by change of scene, his grief for the loss of his wife.

At Paris, Jaspar was introduced to the Chief-Consul Napoleon, and the meeting exercised a lasting influence over the fate of Mr. Braburn. The penetrating eye of Bonaparte read at once the character of a man whose talents and position might render him a valuable tool. He saw that Jaspar was vain and discontented; by flattering his vanity, and stirring up his ambition, the wily Consul found the master-key to his heart. Jaspar was gratified beyond measure at the notice, and (as he believed) personal regard of the greatest genius in the world. He was raised higher, if possible, in his own estimation, than he ever had been before.

Nor was it only upon the vanity of Braburn that the subtle tempter had to work. The Englishman's extravagance and carelessness had plunged him into difficulties from which he saw no way of extricating himself with honour. Jaspar could not endure the thought of selling castle and estates, and sinking down at once into a lower grade of society. He could not endure the idea of the hardships to which Liberia, his gifted, his beautiful child, might be exposed! Most intolerable of all was the fear that she might one day reproach him in her heart for having ruined her prospects by his folly. This made the offer of an enormous bribe, a temptation hard to be resisted. There had been a time when Jaspar Braburn would have started back in horror from the idea of selling his country and betraying his king—and even now he dared not look at his own conduct in the full clear light of truth. Jaspar tried to deceive himself, he gladly let others deceive him; he suffered himself to be drawn into treason—yet shrank from the name of a traitor! Braburn was no hardened rebel, steadily pursuing a course of evil—but a weak man, driven desperate by vain efforts to gain a niche in the Temple of Fame!

We will now return to Grace Vernon, shut up in her high cell in Nina's Tower. As soon as her guardian had, for the second time, left her alone, she went at once to the ladder, wondering much at the carelessness which had left a prisoner such a communication with the skylight. With an eager, yet trembling step she mounted, pausing at each round to listen, till she laid her small hand on the bolt of the window. This was easily withdrawn, but as the skylight opened outwardly, it was with no slight difficulty that Grace succeeded in raising it. She had hardly sufficient strength in her slender arms to push up the frame, especially as the ladder afforded but insecure footing for one unaccustomed to climbing. There was something invigorating, however, in the fresh pure air which came through the opening, and with a joyous feeling of a captive escaping from confinement, Grace clambered upon the roof of the Tower. She had never stood there before, and while she gazed with admiration over the wide prospect which it commanded, the height of the building made her feel almost as completely a prisoner as she would have been if unable to quit her cell. It is true that Grace could trace far below her the windings of the gravel walk on which Liberia often sauntered; the dewy lawn where the sunbeams glanced from the gardener's scythe: even the village was not so distant that her ear could not catch the clank of the hammer where the early-rising blacksmith had already lighted his forge. The young girl's voice, if strained to the utmost, might be heard—there was no small comfort in this, for in the land of freedom unjust imprisonment must end as soon as made known.

THE ROYAL INSURANCE COMPANY, 92 Lombard-street, London, and Royal Insurance buildings, Liverpool.

Chairman of the London Board.—SAMUEL BAKER, Esq.
Chairman in Liverpool.—CHARLES TURNER, Esq.

The Royal Insurance Company is one of the largest Offices in the kingdom.

At the Annual Meeting held in August 1859, the following highly satisfactory results were shown:—

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The most gratifying proof of the expansion of the business is exhibited in the one following fact—that the increase alone of the last three years exceeds the entire business of some of the existing and of many of the recently defunct fire insurance companies of this kingdom.

The Premiums for the year 1855 being........£130,060
While the Premiums for the year 1558 are.... 196,148
Showing an actual increase of.................. 66,088 or upwards of 50 per cent. in three years.

The recent returns of duty made by Government for this latter year (1858) again show the "Royal" as more than maintaining the ratio of its increase as stated in former years. Only one among the London insurance offices exhibits an advance to the extent of one-half the increase of the Company, while all the others respectively fall far short of the moiety of its advance.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.

The amount of new Life Premiums received this year is by far the largest received in any similar period since the commencement of the business, and must far exceed the average of amount received by the most successful offices in the kingdom. The number of policies issued in the year was 832, the sum assured £387,752 6s. 8d., and the premium £12,354 3s. 4d. These figures show a very rapid extension of business during the last ten years. Thus:—

Years.		No. of Policies.	Sums Assured.			New Premiums.
1848	..	98	£48,764	17	0	£1,380	9	1
1850	..	190	95,650	9	11	2,627	4	7
1852	..	422	181,504	10	6	5,828	5	10
1854	..	408	161,848	13	4	4,694	16	0
1856	..	703	297,560	16	8	8,850	3	11
1858	..	832	387,752	6	8	12,354	3	4

The remarkable increase in the business of the last four years is mainly consequent upon the large bonus declared in 1855, which amounted to no less than £2 per cent. per annum on the sums assured, and averaged 80 per cent. upon the premiums paid.

PERCY M. DOVE, Manager and Actuary.
JOHN M. JOHNSTON, Secretary to the London Board.
