CHAPTER II.

THE OYSTER-SALOON. "If any will not work, neither shall he eat."

It was nearly two o'clock before Harrison went home. First he had to prepare the string-beans; then one of the boarders called him to do an errand, for which he paid him a dime, after which the cook gave him a number of chores to do; so that altogether he had made quite a profitable morning of it. Beside this, he had eaten a hearty dinner, as indeed he did almost every day, before he left the hotel, and, with the consent of the proprietor, carried home a basket of broken pieces for his mother.

Harrison was an obliging little fellow. Always civil in his conduct, prompt and faithful in whatever he was required to do, he had rendered himself a favorite with all. Much of this he owed to to her boy. She was very fond of giving Scripher commands by the word of God. In this way, though only a lad of ten years, Harrison was far better acquainted with the teachings of the Bible than many who were twice his age.

On the morning in question he was unusually happy : first, because he had two dimes to add to his secret fund for the new bonnet; and next, because he had enjoyed a pleasant talk with the little girl.

Mrs. Danforth was setting the table for dinner when he entered, and received him with a warm smile of welcome.

"See how much I have earned !" said the boy, giving her a hearty kiss, and then pouring into her open palm several small pieces of silver.

"You know, my dear," she replied, with smile, "who it is that said, "The hand of the diligent maketh rich;'" then taking his basket, she added, "but you have brought quite a feast. I hope you have not dined."

"Oh yes, I have! But I expect there are pretty nice things in there. I heard one of the cooks talking about it. A gentleman came in and ordered a dinner at one o'clock; pigeons, fricasseed chicken, and lots of other dishes. Waiter told the cook he just tasted them, and then sent them away. He had no appetite, he said. I told cook if he'd get up in the morning and work, as I did, he'd have appetite enough. She laughed and said, 'Well, they're paid for, and you may put them in your basket.'"

"I hope Mr. Clarkson knows how much she gives us," suggested the woman, stopping in her work of taking the rich food from the basket.

"I wouldn't take it without," replied the boy. drawing himself proudly up to his full height. Only last week he told her not to encourage the street beggars, but to give to those she knew were worthy, and who tried to help themselves. Once in a while, too, he meets me with my basboy.'"

Just at this moment the door opened, and Mr. Danforth entered. He was quite a gentlemanlylooking man, of about thirty-five years. A close observer might have noticed a shade of anxiety passing over the wife's countenance; but after a second glance she seemed happily disappointed, and her spirits rose accordingly.

"You are just in time," she said; "dinner is some confusion. "It'll cost me a good deal for my own dress; and then, it's better for the boy to depend on himself. He might learn to be idle you know, and that's against your principles, wife. Besides, Bub, you can read and write now, and keep accounts nigh about as well as I can. "You're not going out again, I hope," said Mrs. Danforth, anxiously, as he arose and took his hat.

"I told Mr. Lamson I'd be down there, and kinder get used to things to be ready for tomorrow, that's all. I'll be back again in an hour or so.'

"There's wood to cut," she urged, "and it will be very lonely without you."

"Harrison will cut some till I come."

"I'll clear away the tea things, mother, and then read to you," cried the boy, in a cheerful tone, as he saw how difficult it was for her to keep from shedding tears. "And I haven't told you yet what a fine chance I had this afternoon.

A gentleman at the tailor's shop asked me to go way up town for him to carry a note. He paid me well, too; but the best of it was, that the his mother, who was untiring in her instructions lady to whom I carried it gave me a book and an omnibus ticket, so I rode all the way back. But ture authority for her advice, and of enforcing I forgot to tell you that the tailor would have some work ready this evening: perhaps I had better run and get it now."

HOME.

What a beautiful place is a home Where the husband and wife agree, Where the children are happy and glad, And skip about blithesome and free! What a beautiful place is a home Where Christian love reigns in its pride, Where the husband and wife still appear Like affectionate bridegroom and bride!

What a horrible place is a home Where the man and the woman e'er wrangle. Where the children are brought up 'midst strife, And taught little else but to jangle ! What a horrible place is a home Where religion doth never preside, Where the heads scarcely seem to remember They ever were bridegroom and bride!"

"And I'm ready for it," was the hearty reply "I've been walking all the morning, and I expect at last I've found just about the right thing for me to do. Ho! those birds look as if they would relish finely !"

Harrison then repeated the story of the dyspeptic gentleman, at which his father laughed and said, "It's an ill wind that blows no one good. Now I'm perfectly willing he should order dinners and pay for them; we'll find good appetites for them, wont we. Bub?"

"I suppose," remarked Mrs. Danforth, "that he is one of those who will not work, and therefore, though he has an abundance, cannot eat." "Waiter said he looked awful sickly," added Harrison.

"I expect I've engaged myself in a first-rate situation," resumed Mr. Danforth, laying down the bones of a chicken he had been sucking. "What is it ?" eagerly inquired his wife.

"Why, it's a kind of an overseer-general in an oyster saloon."

"I had rather you would shovel coal," exclaimed Mrs. Danforth, in a tone of great disappointment.

"What in the name of nature can you have to say against an oyster-saloon? It would bring me into company and constant intercourse with some of the first gentlemen of the city."

"That is just what I feared. I am afraid of the temptation for you, my dear husband." "What, after I've pledged myself to you to let alone all kinds of intoxicating drinks?" The man colored and looked somewhat annoyed; and his wife, noticing that Harrison was listening eagerly, added suddenly, "When you are rested, my dear, I wish you would carry home this vest to the tailor's and bring me some more work." "I'm rested now, mother, so I'll be off;" and taking the bundle he ran down the stairs, whist-ting merrily at his favorite tune. When he was gone Mrs. Danforth kindly remonstrated with her husband, urging the inexpediency of placing himself in the way of temptation, when work could surely be obtained elsewhere. He argued that here he could be treated as a gentleman, that he could have better wages, and altogether it was a fine opportunity. At any rate he had gone too far to recede.

His wife sighed heavily, but ceased to urge him further.

"The man was very much taken with my appearance," resumed Mr. Danforth, feeling that he had gained his point. " I'm to know whether he accepts my terms before night. So keep up good courage. I shall be able to support you like a this Stock. lady yet-who knows ?" and he turned to leave

At night Mr. Danforth came home in grand spirits, and announced that he had been engaged at a good salary, and was to commence his labors in the morning. His wife bravely represed a sigh, tried to smile, and to feel hopeful. Presently Harrison came home in a pleasant state of excite ment. He was just about to narrate his after noon's success to his mother, when he noticed that his father was present, and, with a prudence which had been dearly bought by past experience, waited until he should find her alone. THE PSALMIST, WITH MUSIC; A MANUAL FOR THE SERVICE OF SACRED SONG, containing ALL THE HYMNS OF THE PSALMIST, with a copious and very CHOICE SELECTION OF TUNES, adapted to all the metres, on the same page with the hymn, for the convenience of CONGREGATIONAL SINGING, and also for CHOIR USE. Collated and edited by B. F. EDMANDS, Esq.

Royal 12mo, cloth, arabesque, 1.25; sheep, 1.50; Turkey morocco, gilt, 3.50.

THE PRALMIST is unquestionably the best collection of Hymns -THE PSALEIIST is unquestionably the best collection of Hymns for public worship in the English language. It was originally pre-pared with great care and expense. It was edited by hrethfen whose acknowledged poetical tasts, doctrinal soundness and pas-toral experience qualified them preeminantly for the work." The hymns were also aubinited for critical examination and revision to a large Committee, composed of pastors and literary men of distinc-tion in every section of the Union, to whose judicious labors the work over much of its remarkable perfection. It has been wel-comed by gastors and churches everywhere as the best book for public worship ever published. Such has been its unparalleled popularity that it may now be said to have become THE BOOK OF THE BAPTIST DENOMINATION, being almost universally used in the churches throughout the United States and also in the British Provinces. It contains nearly TRIBTESN HUNDRED HYMNS, about one-fourth of which are by Watts. Among the other prominent authors, will be found Dodd. Watts. Among the other provincent authors, will be built bour ridge, Steele, Montgomery, Cowper, Kelly, Newton, Wesley, Top-lady, Heber, Barbauld, Bowring, Sigourney, Scott, Hemans, etc. etc., numbering in all nearly three hundred different authors / The whole field of English sacred literature has been explored, and the cest appropriate productions culled, to form this admirable col-

Pastors in Boston and vicinity, in New York and Philadelphia, Pastors in Boston and vicinity, in New York and Philadelphia, Professors in the various-Theological Seminaries, and a great num-ber of Clergymen, of Churches, Associations and Conventions, in every State of the Union, have, unsolicited, given their most un-qualified testimony to the lifth character of this work. Among the vast number of testimonials which might be given, -- sufficient, in all, to form a good-sized volume, -- is the fallowing: --Rev. Geneous B. IDE, D. D., anys of the work, with characteristic concerve of thought and beauty of expression. "Such another coffee-

I do not believe the world can fur-nish, and I am certain the English language cannot! It is a work, in every respect, of such surpassing accellence as to leave nothing in its department to be desired." This strong, emphasic language of Dr. Ide has been fully, ap-proved and endorsed by Dr. Hague, Dr. Brantley, and other cler-symen of note. Candid judges of other denominations have commonded the Pasingt as having no superior, if any equal, in character and fit-ness for public worship.

THE PRAIMER, WITH MUSIC, INVOLVING a large outlay of time and money, was undertaken to meet the growing desire on the part if many churches to adopt CONGERGATIONAL SINGING. of many churches to adopt CONGREGATIONAL SINGING. This Manual embraces ALL THE HYMNS OF THE PSALBIST, with one or more times adapted to each hymn. The times have been selected, with great care and rare indigment, by B. F. En-many years in one of our largest churches, and an active manager of average of our leading musical societies. They are chiefly taken from the approved standard times, whose long use and popularity in the distribution of the Manual, its cheapness, its judicious arrange-ment, as well as its ADMIRABLE SELECTION OF TURES, give it im-portant advantages over every other Manual for public worship. Churches already using the Pauluist -- which is almost universal -- can introduce this new officion, with MUSIC, at very trifling expense. No change of books will be required for those who do not join in the singing. The antibering of hymns is the same in all editions, and the full and perfect LEDRARS enable minister or
