The Two Homes; or, Earning and Spending.

CHAPTER VI

DEATH AT THE COTTAGE. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his

Meanwhile Mr. Appleton, as he was now called had been visited with severe affliction. His grandmother, who, ever since he could remember, had enjoyed a remarkable degree of health, home under the roof which had sheltered his caught a violent cold in consequence of being overtaken while at church by a storm, and was confined to her bed for several weeks. She recovered from this sickness, but continued feeble, so that Henry devoted the greater part of his evenings to the care of her, enlivening many a long hour by his cheerful conversation. The young woman, daughter of a neighbor, who had and by her devoted attention relieved Henry of much solicitude when obliged to be absent from

One afternoon he returned unexpectedly to the cottage, to prepare for a ride of a few miles, and found Mary in the kitchen engaged in cooking

"How's grandma?" he asked, pleasantly. "Very comfortable. She had been knitting for an hour or two." He ran to his chamber, changed his coat, brushed his hair, and then opened the door to the parlor. There sat the old lady, apparently asleep, her head supported upon one hand, her arm resting on the chair. He stepped softly towards her, and gazed a moment into that loving, peaceful countenance, upon which a smile lingered, and then gently left the room. "She is asleep," he whispered to Mary, " and I didn't wake her." Mary nodded, but made no reply. Henry went out through the shed, blacked his shoes, opened the gate and latched it carefully behind him, when suddenly he stopped. "She will be disappointed," he said to himself

"and as I may be detained after my usual hour to return home, I'll go back and tell her so.' The young girl was rather surprised to hear him return and open the door into the parlor, but went on with her work until startled by a loud scream from Henry for help. She ran to his aid, and saw him on his knees before his grandmother, imploring her to speak to him. But her voice, which heretofore had always responded cheerfully to his, continued silent; her countenance, which had beamed so fondly upon him, remained fixed and immovable.

For a moment Mary stood speechless with horror, and then darted from the house, across the garden to summon her mother.

"She is not dead!" cried Henry, as the neighbors gathered around her, wishing to remove her to the bed. "She cannot be dead; she has only finited." "Leave her to us; we will do everything to restore her," said a kind voice, pitying the anguish depicted on the countenance of the young have two excellent servants ready, in the shape

"Cannot some one be sent for the doctor?" exclaimed Henry. "I am sure she cannot be dead!" and he continued vigorously to chafe the cold, and in a dying condition. She was fully conscious of her situation, and lay with her head resting on the breast of her grandson, her hand clasped in his, while he, at her request, was repeating the soul-sustaining words: "Yea, though ton, make a bed, and keep all his clothes in perwalk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me. Surely goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever." When he ceased, her lips feebly moved, and inclining his ear, Henry could just catch the words-

"Fear God-my dear boy-and keep-all hiscommandments—then he will give you peace in death-and bless you throughout all eternity." The voice grew fainter and then ceased; but presently, with a slight pressure of his hand, she whispered-

"Remember-dear-you've always-been a comfort—to me. I'm—going—home—now." These last words were spoken like a child going to sleep; and presently she was asleep in Jesus. resting forever in the bosom of his love.

The decease of his beloved relative, who had acted in the triple capacity of father, mother, and friend, cast a deep gloom over the mind of Henry. He was now alone in the world. He felt desolate. forsaken. He took his hasty meals in the sympathizing family of his partner, but still slept at the cottage. There in the evening he would sit and read, and pray for grace to acquiesce in this appointment of Providence; and perhaps the next minute glance at the vacant chair, and burst into a passion of tears.

His pastor visited and conversed with him : told him he was doing wrong to cherish his grief and brood over his sorrow so as to impair his health and render him incapable of performing the duties of life. He urged an entire change of scene; and at length after consultation with his partner, Henry determined to shut up the cottage and go a journey. It must be confessed that it was with a sad heart he left the home of his youth, the grave of his grandmother, even for the short space of one month. In order to stimulate him to exertion and give him something to occupy his mind, Mr. Morse suggested that he should visit a large inland town, where his sister, Mrs. Bullard, resided, and which was said to contain some fine specimens of architecture. Henry remembered to have well. seen the son of this lady while visiting at his uncle's, and that he had been much pleased with him. He consented to take N--- in his way, and left home with letters of introduction in his

At this very time it so happened that Susy Lee, a young orphan, was visiting at the house of Mr. Bullard, who was her uncle, When Henry retired to rest on the night of his arrival, after having passed an evening in her society, he acknowledged to himself that he had never met so lovely a character. He determined to watch her closely, to cultivate her acquaintance as much as was in his power during his short stay in Nand then-why if she was what she seemed, he already felt it would be no difficult task to love

Mr. and Mrs. Bullard became exceedingly interested in their sorrowing guest. They tried to Take my word for it, it is a young man's evenings cheer him; and Susy, too, looked at him so mournfully out of her clear blue eyes, as if she would say: "I can pity you, for I, too, am an orphan," that he began to think there might after A little boy, the son of an artisan, who resides all be something left to live for. His kind host in one of the villages in the neighborhood of urged him to prolong his stay. Now that their son was away, they were so lonely it seemed pleasant to hear his voice about the house. Susy ment among the juveniles in that locality, when by, until his time to be absent had nearly expired, and his journey was still only in anticipation. He wrote his partner in a more cheerful strain, and postpaned his return another week; for he had ascertained that at the close of that time, Susy was going to B—, a town about twenty miles from his own home, and he had acquired a right to accompany her there. She had just completed her education at an academy, and had already engaged herself as teacher of a private school. He left her comfortably situated in a house of a friend, and returned to the cottage, like Isaac, comforted after his mother's death.

He had now an additional motive for exertion;

his beloved Susy must be provided with a home. The house in which he had always lived with his grandmother, she had bequathed to him. This was all she had to give him, as her pension was only during her own life. The young man was fortunate enough to obtain a small family, consisting of a man, his wife, and one child, to move into the cottage, and take him to board. To accomplish this, he made some trifling repairs, and run a light verandah across the front and one side to give it a more modern appearance; but this he was happy to do in order still to have his

A few months later, a fine lot of land, situated on the main street, was thrown into the market in consequence of the death of the owner. It presented a fine slope down to the road, and was capable of being cut up for several house-lots. the astonishment of many. Mr. Appleton became the purchaser, paying down two thirds of nursed her while sick, still remained in the family, the price and giving a mortgage for the remainder.

"That was rather an expensive purchase of yours, Henry," said Mr. Morse, one day, as they

"It was, indeed," was the reply; "and under other circumstances, I should consider it an unsafe one; but this is, in my opinion, the finest site in town. I have had my eye upon it for a long

"I consider it is a safe speculation," added the gentleman. "Land must rise in this part of the town: and you can build—let me see,"—measuring it with his eye,- "I should say five houses

"Yes, I suppose so," replied the other; "but intend to build only one.

"It ought to be a very handsome one, then, on such an elevation, commanding a view of the whole town and the river in front.

"I hope it may be an ornament to the town." "Still I rather think you mistake. You could make it much more profitable to build several ouses not as expensive. They would sell better.' Henry smiled, but shook his head. "Have you decided upon the plan?"

"Oh. I don't intend to build for a year or two, ill I have paid for the place, and then, probably, pretty much the style of grandmother's." The senior partner looked aghast.

"In the meantime," continued Henry, much amused, "I shall cultivate the land, and set out trees-perhaps lay out walks, if I am able. mean to improve all my leisure time in garden-

"O ho!" exclaimed Mr. Morse, archly, "I begin to understand. Well, I acknowledge, if one may judge by your account, this place is none too good for your espoused."

WHAT YOUNG PEOPLE SHOULD KNOW. The best inheritance that parents can leave their children, is the ability to help themselves. This is better than a hundred thousand dollars apiece. In any trouble or difficulty, they will of their two hands. Those who can do nothing, and have to be waited on, are helpless, and easily disheartened at the misfortunes of life. There are many other things which would render boys more useful to themselves and others these are merely a specimen. But the young man who can do all these things well, and who is ready at all times to assist others, will command far more respect and esteem than if he knew merely how to drive fast horses, smoke cigars, play cards, and talk nonsense to foolish young ladies

YOUR EVENINGS, BOYS!

Great boys and little boys, here is a question which concerns you all. How do you spend your evenings? If your parents or guardians allow you to go from home in the evening, where do you go, and how is this time spent by you? Read this little account, and think of the lesson

Joseph Clark was a fine-looking and as healthy a lad as ever left the country to go into a city store. His cheek was red with health, his arm strong, and his step quick. His master liked his looks, and said, that boy will make something.

He had been a clerk about six months, when Mr. Abbott observed a change in Joseph. His cheek grew pale, his eyes hollow, and he always seemed sleepy. Mr. Abbott said nothing for awhile. At length, finding Joseph alone in the counting-room one day, he asked him if he was "Pretty well, sir," answered Joseph.

"You look sick of late," said Mr. Abbott. "I have the headache sometimes," the young

"What gives you the headache?" asked the merchant. "I do not know as I know, sir."

"Do you go to bed in good season?" Joseph blushed. "As early as most of the boarders," he said. "And how do you spend your evenings,

Joseph?" "O, sir, not as my pious mother would approve answered the young man, tears starting in his

Queen Insurance Company

CAPITAL-ONE MILLION STERLING. RETURN OF FIRE INSURANCE DUTY FOR 1861. (Ordered by the House of Commonsto be printed, July 8, 1861.) THE usual Annual Return, just published by the Go vernment, shows that the Increase of Duty paid by the "Queen Insurance Company," 1861 over 1860, ex-ceeded that of thirty-eight other Fire Offices, some o which have been in operation for upwards of half a century. While the return shows a falling off in the amount paid by six offices, it also shows that the increase of the Queen exceeded that of all the London offices but two, and all the Scotch offices but one (which, during the year, had absorbed the business of another office.) The increase of the Queen also exceeded all the Provincial offices but two and was nearly five times that of both the Irish offices put together. Taking the gross amount of duty for the last two years, the return shows that the Queen was the only office which, in that period, had doubled the amount paid. These facts, based upon the highest authority, prove that the eminent position thus occupied by the Queen Insurance Company, is doubtless owing to the high character of its proprietary, and the distinguished liberality of the Directors in the settlement of losses. Gratified by the remark able confidence heretofore reposed in the Queen, it will t the constant endeavour of the Management to su
