COTTAGE SONG.

BY JOHN S. ADAMS. We've a cottage clothed with roses Near a wood Where the singing birds of summer

Nest and brood: There in early spring the daisies Gem the sod. Looking up to heaven above them,

And to God. There in holy calm we worship One above,

Through his works that all around us Speak his love; Read we there his will in every Rock and tree. While his blessings fall upon us

Beautiful the morning sunlight Cometh there, Crowning nature at her early Morning prayer; And at evening, when the twilight Closeth round, Still, devoutly at her worship,

Rich and free.

Is she found. We are not alone, for angels Come and go, Walking often through our cottage To and fro;

Promising to guide and guard us With their love, Till we go to live among them, Up above.

Simple life is ours—we follow Nature's way, Learning of her truthful lessons Day by day; Striving to fulfil our mission,-Doing good:

Living in our happy cottage Near the wood.

"ONLY A LOST CHILD."

"I have just come to tell you that Jane Higgins is getting worse, and is very anxious to see you," said my friend, Mrs. Parkes, to me. "Do you think her end is near?" I asked, struck by the melancholy, thought not quite unexpected intelligence. "I fear it is," was the melancholy answer.

"The doctor said she may live a couple of days still, but he would not be surprised to find her dead to-morrow. Poor thing! what a pity-such a good, lovely girl! But, the Lord be praised, she rejoices in her Saviour."

I locked my desk, took my hat, and proceeded at once to the invalid's home. But, before entering her sick-room, I must tell you her story. Perhaps you will learn from it that loss is not a calamity; nay, that even the loss of all may be but the beginning of a great gain.

There was a crowd in one of the main thorago. A little girl of four years was standing crying on the pavement. Her face was rather soiled by tears, which she tried to wipe away with her hands, yet she was a fine interesting-looking child. Her dress showed that she did not belong to the lowest class, for there was a neatness, and even a shade of elegance noticeable in the cut of | Charlie. her frock. The expression of her countenance, too, seemed to show that her parents must be people of some education.

Of course, there were women and children crowding round her, and ladies and gentlemen peeping over other people's shoulders for a minute or two, making room again for other ladies and gentlemen, who, upon finding that it was "only a lost child," and that a policeman was already looking after her, continued their walk under the impression that it was "all right now." But one lady remained, and, pressing through the crowd, took a place near the policeman. It was my triend, Mrs. Parkes.

"Where do you live?" the policeman asked, gently laying his hand on the child's shoulder. " Mother!" she answered, with a fresh burst of

The policeman repeated the question, but obtained the same answer. "You may continue at that till to-morrow morning," observed a gentleman in a humorous "Poor thing!" said a woman standing behind the child, and looking down upon her with compassion, "how anxious her mother will be!" "Let me speak to the child," Mrs. Parkes said, upon seeing that the policeman made no pro-

Mrs. Parkes' kind motherly voice had a wonderful effect upon the child. She gradually ceased crying and gave answers to the questions which were put to her. All that could be got out of her, however, was that she had a father and mother, and two brothers, that her name was Jane, and that she lived in King street. But which of the thirty King streets of London she could not tell.

"Well, she must go to the station, then," the policeman said, taking her by the hand, and trying to walk off with her. But the child began again to cry so bitterly and to struggle so much, that the policeman prepared to take her up in his arms and carry her away by force.

A general murmur of disapprobation rose from the bystanders. The policeman hesitated. "What else can I do?" he said, "I can't leave the child here."

"Suppose you don't find out her parents." Mrs. Parkes said, " what will you do with her?" "Why, I don't know, ma'am, I think we must send her to the workhouse, if they will take "Poor thing! poor thing!" the mob cried. "Do take her to our house, mamma," said Mary, Mrs. Parkes' little daughter. "Yes, please mamma, do take her," said her boy John

The policeman had no objection to the child's going to the lady's house, which was close by. Mrs. Parkes gently took her by the hand, and she went without the least resistance.

The next day the policeman came back to say that the child's parents lived in a lane off King street, Tower Hill. He had found her mother, who was a French woman, lying in bed in the last stage of consumption. The poor woman had not even missed her child; for, during the last -few days it had been staying with one of her neighbors. Her husband was a sailor, and so the other seventeen. They were reported as a bad, drunken lot. The father was on a voyage to China. The child's younger brother had taken were her two sons, one fifteen years of age, and her out for a walk ; but had not made his appearance since. Some days later it turned out that he had been sent to prison on account of some disorderly conduct. The mother was said to be a good, respectable woman, who worked hard to support herself and her girl as long as she was able; but of late she had been living on the charity of her neighbors.

Mrs. Parkes asked me to accompany her to the poor woman's house. We took little Jane

The scene which we there witnessed was heartrending. The sick woman started up to embrace her darling once more.

"My own poor darling," she cried, "who will care for you when I am gone?"

"My good woman," said Mrs. Parkes abruptly, "do you know Jesus?"

yes," she answered, making the sign of

"She is a Roman Catholic," a woman whispered, who had followed us into the house.

" It is Jesus who sent me in the way of your lost child," Mrs. Parkes continued. "Jesus is if you give yourself into His merciful and almighty hands," The woman cast a sad look of despair at the "You have been very kind to my Jane," she said. "Will you care for her when I am dead?

I know you are a good lady. God will bless you for it. She is a good child, ma'am." She uttered these words with great effort. Mrs. Parkes consented to take the child under her care, and it was affecting to witness the glow of joy which this promise spread over the pale, emaciated face." "Your child will be cared for," Mrs. Parkes said. "But let me ask after yourself. How is your soul, my good woman? Is it lost or saved?

You are soon to appear before the eternal Judge. Can you die in peace?" The dying woman gave no answer. We then spoke a few words of admonition and consolation, and left the house with the child. On calling the next day I found her dead. There lived a good, respectable widow in Mrs. Parkes' neighbourhood, and she kept a small shop. Mrs. Parkes boarded the child with her. Nearly a year had elapsed when one day Jane's father came to see her. That he was fond of drink was evident from the first glance at his face. Still his fault seemed to arise from weakness of character rather than intentional wickedness. He was a merry, care-for-nothing fellow. He came to say that he had married another wife, whose acquaintance he had made in a public-house, and that if we had no objection to keep his child he would be thankful to leave her, as his present wife had enough to do to keep his other two "rascals" right. Mrs. Parkes was but too glad to agree to this arrangement. "This is a merciful leading of God," she said. "To return the dear child to her father would be to send her back to the pit of perdition from which we have so providently been led to rescue her. But I knew our Heavenly Father would arrange it in some such way as this."

Little Jane grew up a most excellent girl. She became the pet of the neighborhood, and the pleasure of Mrs. Parkes and her family. It appeared that she was gifted with a clear head and a tender heart. Mrs. Williams, whom she got into the habit of calling "mother," was a woman who had been trained in the school of adversity, and had learned her lessons well. In spirit she had followed the example of those women of the Gospel who brought their children to Jesus that He might bless them. (Conclusion next week.)

A BATTLE THAT WAS NOT FOUGHT.

Two boys once differed about some trifling matter while at play, and one of them challenged the other to fight. The challenge was accepted, and the two heroes went into an adjoining field to settle the quarrel. Jackets and caps were thrown upon the ground, and all was in readiness, oughfares of the West-End some twenty years but each appeared unwilling to strike the first

"Now, then, strike me, if you dare!" says the younger boy, with a look of defiance. His antagonist looked at him, but did not like to strike, but at length said: "Nay, I have nothing to strike you for

"Well, then," said the other, who had provoked the quarrel at first, " let us be good friends again, for I have nothing to strike for either." They dressed and left the field without striking a blow, and never quarrelled after. One of them now holds a very responsible position as a teacher How few battles would be fought, either among young people or old, if in imitation of these boys, the disputants would strive to find a reason for the quarrel before they strike a blow. "The beginning of strife is as when one letteth out water; therefore leave off contention before it be meddled with."-Merry's Museum.

York Regiment: Near Acquia Creek, March 4, 1863. Owing to the great exposure and terrible decomposition after the battle of Antietam, I was utterly prostrated and very sick. My stomach would not retain medicine. An article called Plantation Bitters, prepared by Dr. Drake, of New York, was prescribed to give me strength and an appetite. To my great surprise they gave me immediate relief. Two bottles almost allowed me to join my regiment.

Rehold I bring glad tidings of great joy, To every bald man and beardless boy— Yea, to all old women and maidens fair. Yea, to all old women and maidens fair,

Who—by whatever cause—have lost their hair.

THE ONGUENT, or Stimulator, the great discovery of the celebrated Doctor J. E. McNeir, is universal y acknowledged to be as far ahead of all other preparations before the public for making the Whiskers, Moustaches, or Hair grow luxuriantly, as if by magic—as day is ahead of night, for the ordinary toil of man. For the truth of this assertion, I do not merely ask you to take my word, but shall furnish the most satisfactory proof.

That in order to controul the trade and check most of the impositions heretofore practised, I have procured the receipts for making all preparations pretending to make receipts for making all preparations pretending to make Hair grow before the public, and can certify that the On-guent contains five times the forcing power of all the other reparations put together.

The Onguent is perfectly harmless, and will not stain or injure the Skin, and will force the Hair to Grow on Bald Heads from eight to ten weeks, and Whiskers in six weeks. Prepared by J. M. WARNES, and for sale by march 2—1m J. CHALONER, King-street.
