PASSAGES IN THE LIFE OF A PRIVATE

GOVERNESS. By the Author of "Mind whom you Marry." CHAPTER V.

TELLING HOW THE DESERTED ONE FARED. Smile on, young mother! brightly smile, and thank the Lord of Heaven

That to those cark and anxious eyes the future is not given For the day may come, when, dead alke to earth and thy deep sigh. Bown in the acep and quiet grave thy little one shall lie. HON. MRS. NORTON.

It must have been three month before 1 made another engagement, during which time I saw Mrs. Hudderstield once and only once. But up to that period she had heard nothing from her husband. My next situation required me to travel with the family. When at Vienna 1 received rather a melancholy note about the death of the dear little babe; but still, just as I expected, no tidiugs from the gambler. I answered this, and wrote again from Berlin, and again from Naples, but to noue of these could I get a reply. 1 did not believe her professions of friendship had been insincere, or that her attachment was of the mushroom kind, rapid in its growth and rapid in its decay; but I began to think she was enduring hardships and that privations, which I knew she would be unwilling to communicate, partly perhaps from the remains of pride, but chiefly from an unwillingness to give me pain. At the end of fifteen months we returned to England, and spent the season in London. Of course I took the earliest opportumity of scarching out the gambler's deserted wife. Her old medical friend told me she had remained with him nearly two months, and after this lived six months in Wandsworth. There, having : natural taste for drawing, she studied design, for the express purpose of obtaining a livehhood by employing her pencil and invention for some o the Yorkshire manufacturers, some of whose agents in London had promised her a ready sale for anything she might do which they might find suitable. After her removal from Wandsworth she went to Islington, but about two months since she had left there, and he was unable to find out where she was gone. Thinking a personal application to the addressess in Wandsworth and Islington might give me some further information. I lost no opportunity in going.

" Did a lady, of the name of Huddersfield, lodge here last summer?" I enquired of a respectable woman who was both mistress and servant of a small, clean ten-roomed house.

"Yes, mum she left me last Michaelmas." "From here she went to Islington, I think ; but as I am a particular friend of hers, and am not able to find her, I should be much pleased i. you could tell me anything about her while she was with you."

" Perhaps you would step inside, ma'am; for I'm sure there's no lodger 1 ever had that 1 felt so much for as for that dear lady. Poor creature, little sitting-room. "This house and the one she used to live in must be very different, according to all that Miss Chara near the are " she continued, as she handed me a chair in a neat to all that Miss Clara used to say."

" Did the baby die here ?"

"Yes, ma'am, a fortnight after she came. It took inflammation of the chest. I shall never forget the poor lady; she did take on so dreadful! I've had tive chillren, you see. Three of 'em levied here annually to oil the machinery of the city government. This sum, immense as it is, can be assessed and paid very readily yearly and every year, and occasion little grumbling, so long as it is believed the public necessities require it. But there is no belief entertained in any quarter that all of these millions of dollars are honestly and legally used. And yet it is difficult to detect all the sluice-ways through which portions of this treasure flow from the public into private hands.

Now and then our masters allow us to know something of the way in which they freece the tax-payers for private ends. Of late the legislative generosity of the city has been exceedingly ostentations of its religious-not to say sectarian tendencies. Last year, immediately after the riots, and while the ruins of the colored Orphan Asylum where yet smoking, the Alderman and Councilmen gave fifty thousand dollars toward the eudowment of a Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum. During the past summer the same devout legislators voted over four thousand dollars to pay for a memorial to Archbishop Huges, and to preserve their consistency, they have just granted $5000 to the College of St. Francis Xavier.

died when babies; one fine young man fell overboard simp; and the other is a girl; bless her she's a great confidit to me. You see I know what trouble is; but when Mrs. Huddersfield lost her dear little baby, 'twas the first death she had ever had with her children; and I don't wonder she took it to heart so much."

"Were the other children well?"

"Why, no; the little young gentleman, next to the baby, began to drop a goodish bit before they left here. He took a good drop of that sickening cod liver oil; and I always says, you know, ma'am, 'tis a very bad sign when doctors recommend that. I don't know what ailed him exact, but the dear child dwindled away to a shadow. If yon'll believe me, ma'am, you could see a lighted candle through his little bony hand.'

"The little boy's not dead too?" I eagerly asked, wishing to arrive at the result.

" Well, you see, ma'am just as I was going to say, his poor little eves sunk so far in, and he looked so deadly pale, that no body could have seen the poor child, without feeling he wasn't long for this world, dear little fellow; and I told his ma so ; and said, it was no use going to Islington for a more bracing air: for all as could see knowed he couldn't live, although the doctor said he might get over it, if he had a little change. That's always the way ma'am : when doctors don't know what to do, they advise change of nir, you see, so that they may die out of their hands. But that's neither here nor there; howbeit, the poor little young gentleman did go to Islington. and-"

"Died there !" I interrupted her, "did he?" "Well, that's what I was coming at; for when she left here, she gave me her address, to send on any letter that might come for her; and so you see, as I happened to know where she lived' 'twas rather lucky; for in the chest of drawers she used, there was a great piece of paper put all over the bottom to keep the things clean ; and it must have been near three months after she had gone, and I had had other lodgers between. that when I was putting some fresh paper in, I found a ring of hers that she had left. So I says to my Mary Jane, I'll go and take it this very afternoon. And I went ; and got there just in time to see the poor little fellow breathe his last."

I suppose I looked distressed ; for the woman gave a scrutifizing gaze at me, and proceeded.

"Are you any ways related to 'em, mum?" "Only a friend," I replied; " but I should like to know whether you think her circumstances were comfortable while with you?"

"As far as a-paying of me goes, nobody need wish to have better lodgers than she were ; but I'm afraid they had all to pinch a good deal for it. I couldn't get them to say anything about it, but I believe, many days they never had more than one meal. She and the two little girls used to go out sometimes about one o'clock, but I feel pretty sure it was only to make us fancy they went out to dinner somewhere; which I don't believe poor things, they got; for my Mary Jane took and watched them once. And I don't think 'twas much better at Islington; for when I was over there, at the death of the little boy, the landlady and I had some talk to ourselves about her, and she said the same as I do. Ah, mum ; it's a terrible thing for rich ladies to come down a great fall. You see they're ashamed to say how poor they are, and so you can't help them. I am sure many times, when we've had a nice hot dinner, I've said to my Mary Jane, if it wasn't for offending Mrs. Huddersfield they should have a good meal for once and be welcome too."

1 grew sick at heart, to hear my worst fears confirmed, and to feel that the observation of the Jodging-house keeper was too true: it is difficult to help a lady in pecuniary distress. Will she not suffer a daily martyrdom rather, than expose her poverty f Right or wrong, so it is; and so bes endence is to try them. They speak for themselve. I saw it was with the object of my search. My journey to islington added nothing to what I ude, palpitation of the heart, lack of appetite, distre-
