For the Christian Visitor. LINES TO AN AFFLICTED FRIEND.

Jesus to my earthly keeping Once a jewel kindly gave; But my joy was turned to weeping, For I lost her in the grave.

Mourning for my vanished treasure, Then I heard the Saviour say-"Cease to mourn, for My pleasure I have borne her away.

"Is thy spirit filled with anguish, Are thine eyes with weeping dim? Cease, O mother, thus to languish, . Cease, for I had need of her."

Purer than the dews of morning, Brighter than the stars of night, See thy gem my crown adorning, In a world of heavenly light.

Let thy faith and love be stronger, Though the tide of grief o'erwhelm, Thou must wait a little longer, Ere I give thee back again.

Where the flower of Eden blossom, Where no parting tears are known: I will place it on thy bosom, Thou wilt wear it near my throne.

O, my soul, forbear thy weeping; Lay thy weight of sorrow down, Leave thy gem in Jesus' keeping, Lend it to adorn his crown.

Meekly let me journey thither, Where the loved are gone before; Christ will whisper, come up hither, I will never part thee more.

THE OLD CARTMAN.

I have a mind to tell a little story. That it is brief, may be seen at a glance; that it is true, I most emphatically avow.

About five years ago, or thereabouts, John Ainsley, or "Pap Ainsley," as he was familiarly called -was the owner of a handcart, and earned a living by conveying miscellaneous parcels from one section of the city to another, and receiving therefor the reasonable remuneration of fifty cents per load. To designate the occupation in the prosiest language possible, he was a handcart-man, and when not employed, could always be found during working hours at the corner of Montgomery and California streets. His hair and long beard were quite gray, and his limbs feeble; and if he could not shove as heavy a load through me I am forgiven!" the deep sand, or up the steep grade above him as the stalwart Teuton on the opposite corner, alarm. thereby losing many a dollar, all the light loads in the neighbourhood fell to his share, and the not tell you," he faltered. kind-hearted men not unfrequently travelled a " Pap Ainsley."

Four years ago last September, (I recollect the month, for I had a note of four thousand dollars turned in the afternoon, was scarcely less rejoito pay, and was compelled to do some pretty ced than his good wife at the discovery. sharp financiering to meet it,) having two or three dozen volumes to transfer to my lodgings, I gave the double eagle, I never learned; but this I do the task of transportation to "Pap Ainsley." Ar. know, it took the honest female all of two months riving at my room just as he had deposited the to unravel the knot into which the family had last armful on the table, and observing that the tied themselves during her absence. old man looked considerably fatigued after climb- "Pap Ainsley" still keeps his cart-for no but he was inflexible. I was astonished. "Do you ever drink?" said I.

"Very seldom," he replied, dropping into a chair at my request, and wiping the perspiration from his forehead. "Well, if you drink at all," I insisted, "you will not find as fair an excuse in the next twelve months for indulging, for you appear fatigued and scarcely able to stand." "To be frank," said the old man, "I do not for fifteen years-since-" "Sirce when?" I enquired thoughtlessly, observing his hesitation. The old man told me. Sixteen years ago he was a well-to-do farmer, near Syracuse, New York. He had one child, a daughter. While attending a boarding school in that city-being then a girl sixteen years of age-she formed an attachment for a young physician. Acquainting her father with the circumstances, he flatly refused his consent to a man whom he had never seen, and removing her from school, despatched a note to the gallant with the somewhat pointed information that his presence in the neighborhood of the Ainsley farm would not meet with favor.

The reader of course surmises the result; for such a proceeding could but have one result. In less than a month there was an elopement. The father loaded his double barrelled shot gun aud swore vengeance, but failing to find them, he took to the bottle. His good wife implored him not to give way to despair, but he drank the deeper, and accused her of encouraging the elopement. In three months his wife died, and at the expiration of a year, when the young people returned to Syracuse from Connecticut, where they had remained with the parents of the husband, they learned that the old man had sold his farm, squandered the proceeds, and was almost destitute. Learning their arrival, Ainsley drank himself into a frenzy, and proceeding to the hotel where they were stopping, attacked the husband, wounded him in the arm by a pistol shot, and attempted the life of the daughter, who happily escaped uninjured through the interposition of persons brought to the spot by the report of the pistol.

Ainsley was arrested, tried and acquitted on the plea of insanity. The daughter and her husband returned to Connecticut, since which time the father had not heard from them. He was sent to the lunatic asylum, from which he was dismissed after remaining there for six months.

In 1851 he came to California. He had followed mining for two years, but finding his strength unequal to the pursuit, returned to the city and purchased a handcart, and—the rest is city and purchased a handcart, and-the rest is

"Since then," continued the poor man, bow-ing his face in his hands in agony, "I have not tasted liquor, nor have I seen my poor child."

I regretted that I had been so inquisitive, and expressed to the sufferer the sympathy I really had for him. After that, I seldom passed the corner without looking for "Pap Ainsley," and never saw him but to think of the sad story he had told me. One chilly, drizzly day in the December fol-lowing, a gentleman, having purchased a small marble-top table at an auction room opposite, proffered to the old man the job of carting it to his residence on Stockton street. Not wishing to accompany the carrier, he had selected the face, that probably giving him the best assurance of careful delivery of the purchased articles.

Furnished with the number of the house, the old cartman, after a pretty trying struggle with the steep ascent of California street, reached his destination, and deposited the table in the hall. Lingering a moment, the lady did not surmise the reason, until he politely informed her that "Very well, I will pay you," said the lady, stepping into an adjoining room. She returned, and stating that she had no small coin in the house, handed the man a twenty dollar piece.

He could not make the change. Never mind, I will call to-morrow," he said

" replied the lady, glancing pitying ly at his white locks, and trembling limbs; " I will not put you to such trouble," and she handed the coin to Bridget, with the instruction to go and see if she could get it changed at one of the stores or markets in the neighborhood. "Step into the parlor until the girl returns; the air is chilly, and you must be cold," continued the lady. "Come," she added, as he looked bat his attire and hesitated, "there is a fire in the grate, and no one there but the children.'

" It is somewhat chilly," replied the old man, tollowing her into the parlor, and taking a seat near the fire.

" Perhaps I may find some silver in the house," said the lady, leaving the room, " for I fear Bridget will not succeed in getting the twenty dollar piece changed."

"Come, I love little children," and the child, who had been watching him with curiosity, ran behind the large arm chair, and hesitatingly approached. "What is your name, dear?" inquired the cartman.

"Maria," replied the little one.
"Maria!" he repeated while the great tears gathered in his eyes; "I once had a little girl named Maria, and you look very much asshe did." " Did you?' replied the child, with seeming interest; " and was her name Maria Eastman,

" Merciful God!" exclaimed the old man, starting from his chair, and then dropping into it with his head bowed upon his breast. "This cannot be, and yet why not?"

He caught the child in his arms with an eagerness that frightened her, and gazing into her face until he found conviction there, suddenly rose to leave the house.

"I cannot meet her without betraying myself, and I dare not tell her that I am that drunken father who once attempted to take her life, and perhaps left her husband a cripple," and he groaned as he turned towards the door. The little ones were bewildered.

"You are not going?" said the mother, reappearing, and discovering the old man in the act leaving the hall.

He stopped and apparently turned his face, but seemed to lack the resolution to do aught else. " He said that he had a little Maria once, that looked just like me, mother," shouted the child, her eyes sparkling with delight. The knees of the old cartman trembled, and he leaned against the door for support. The lady sprang towards him, took him by the arm, and attempted to conduct him to a chair. "No, no!" he exclaimed, "not till you tell

" Forgiven for what ?" replied the mother, in
