THE FALL OF THE LEAF.

BY VINCE VERITAS.

How softly the leaves are falling
On the dewy, waving grass,
As if on the poet calling
To linger ere he pass,
With a soft and mystic murmur—
With a requiem for the summer—
For the sunny days gone by,
Whose bright memory may not die
In the poet's gloomy breast,
Though unto their silent rest
All the leaves are softly falling.

And the poet, low reclining,
Yields him to that soothing spell,
Humbly listening, well divining
Whose the strain he loves so well,
Telling of the broken-hearted
Who had often lingered there
Listening to those words—in prayer,
Words of comfort, words of love,
Falling softly from above,
On the mourners low reclining.

On the poet, deeply thinking,
Fall those voices of the grave;
Like the snow-fakes softly sinking
On the dark and wintry wave—
Voices sweet from those who left him—
Flowers opening, daisies fair,
Culled ere yet the wintry air
Nipped their blossoms pure and sweet,
Aye! the dead leaves at his feet
Set the poet sadly thinking.

THREE WORDS OF STRENGTH.

There are three lessons I must write—
Three words, as with a burning pen,
In tracings of eternal light,
Upon the hearts of men.

Have Hope! Though clouds environ round,
And gladness tries her face in scorn,
Put thou the shadow from thy brow—
No night but hath its morn.

Have faith! Where'er thy bark is driven—
The calm'st of seas, the tempest's mirth—
Know this: God rules the bosoms of heaven,
The inhabitants of earth.

Have Love! Not love alone for one;
But man, as man, thy brother call;
And scatter, like the circling sun,
Thy charities on all.

Thus grave these lessons on thy soul—
Hope, Faith, and Love—and thou shalt find
Strength when life's surges rudest roll,
Light when thou e'er wert blind.

—Schiller.

GOOD FOR EVIL.

"Be ye kind to another, tender hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."—Eph. iv. 32.

"He shall repent of it, if I die for it—he shall!" passionately exclaimed Philip, as he wiped the blood from his face, after a fight in which he had had the worst. "I'll make him repent of it!"

"Why, what is the matter?" said his aged grandfather, who, attracted by the noise of the quarrel, had unperceived approached the angry boy.

"Look what he has done!" cried Philip, pointing to a beautiful little model of a ship, which lay crushed and destroyed in the mud. "It has been my work for a month past; I had just finished it; and see—The poor boy could not finish his sentence; grief and passion choked his voice; but, again he muttered between his teeth, 'I'll make him repent of it!'"

"But why did he spoil your model?"

"Oh! he is full of spite and malice,—he always was. We hate one another! He trampled on my ship, so of course I struck him,—and we fought,—and he was the stronger! But I'll have my revenge yet!"

"Come into the house," said the old man quietly, "and let us examine your hurts."

As soon as this was done, and the boy's head bound up, his grandfather laid his hand on the shoulder of Philip, and with a grave look began:—

"I see that your face is not very much hurt; now I must look to a more serious wound."

"What do you mean?" said the boy.

"Must I remind you, that 'if any have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his' (Romans viii. 9). And 'the fruit of the Spirit is love... peace... gentleness... meekness' (Gal. v. 22, 23)."

"Oh, one can't put up with everything! I don't hate those who don't hate me; nor harm those who don't insult me; but I want justice, nothing but justice!"

"If you receive nothing but justice, my boy, a terrible portion will be yours. For my part, I have learned to ask mercy; without it, I could never reach heaven, nor escape hell!"

"You mean mercy from God; I know that we all need that," said Philip; "but that has nothing to do with my quarrel with Ben!"

"It has much to do with it," replied the old man; "for 'Forgive, and ye shall be forgiven'" (Luke vi. 37).

Philip made no reply, and his grandfather continued: "This is the real state of the case, my boy. You have broken God's laws every day of your life, by deeds, or words, or thoughts. Justice has sentenced you to suffer for it; but the very God against whom you have sinned has had mercy upon you: He has sent his Son to die for you, 'the Just One for the unjust'; and now he says to you, and to all who hope for life through his death, 'Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you'" (Eph. iv. 32).

"It is a very difficult thing to do," said Philip, thoughtfully.

"It is a thing which must be done, and if you are Christ's, will be done," replied his grandfather; "for what said the Lord himself? 'If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses' (Matt. vi. 15). Think over these words; pray over them; and tell me what you feel on the subject to-morrow."

The next morning, Philip met his grandfather with a calmer spirit. "I have thought over your quarrel with Ben," said he. "I had intended to have let fly his enemy, or to have done him some mischief or other; but now I have made up my mind to let the fellow alone. Are you satisfied with me now, grandfather?"

"You have taken one step in the right way, dear Phil; but you have not yet, I fear, forgiven as you have been forgiven. Think over the subject again, and try your heart by the word of God."

At breakfast Philip sat silent and thoughtful. Before he rose to prepare for church, he spoke again to his grandfather. "I see that it is not enough to give up revengeful acts, I suppose that I ought to keep down angry words also. This is a harder task than the other, for I love to speak out my mind; but I'll try, with God's help, not to speak ill of Ben. Grandfather, are you satisfied?"

"That is another great step, my boy; but ask your own heart if it really forgives as you have been forgiven."

hearts. Ben came into my mind, and I prayed for him; and do you know why I did so?"

"God put it into your heart, my boy."

"Why, the second chapter that was read struck me so. To hear of St. Stephen, bleeding and dying, and the cruel stones hurled at him, and the people yelling around him; then, to think of his praying in the midst of his agony, 'Lord, lay not this sin to their charge' (Acts vii. 60). He had much more to forgive than ever I have had. I wonder if the heart of any of his cruel enemies was ever turned?"

"Do you forget, Philip, that St. Paul was one of them? that he stood and looked on while Stephen was murdered? How little the persecutor then thought that he was so soon to join the Christian band which he wished to destroy, and that he should die, like St. Stephen, a martyr for the gospel!"

"With what joy they must have met in heaven!" cried Philip; "perhaps I may find my enemy there!"

"And there he would welcome you as a brother," said the aged man.

The next morning was rainy and wet, but Philip was absent; and his grandfather, as he sat by his little fire, and looked on the untasted breakfast, wondered what had become of his boy. At last he heard a well-known step, and Philip entered, tired, and dripping with the rain.

"Where have you been, my child?"

"I've walked all the way to Hackney," cried Philip gaily, as he pulled off his wet jacket, and hung it up to dry.

"To Hackney! why Ben lives there: did you go to see him?"

"The truth is, grandfather, that I heard but last evening that Mr. Jones wants an errand boy, and that if a smart lad were to apply at once, he would be likely to get the place. Now, Ben has been for some time out of work, I thought that this might suit him; so, as I delayed he might lose his chance,—I got up early this morning and walked over."

"There was a look of quiet pleasure in the old man's face, as he poured out the tea for his grandson's breakfast,—it said more than volumes of praise. After a minute's pause he inquired, 'How did Ben receive you, my boy?'"

"All in his old way," replied Philip, with his choler rising as he spoke. "He laughed when first he saw me, and asked how I liked what he had given me on Saturday. Grandfather! I felt inclined to knock him down; but I thought of what I had heard at church, and restrained myself; and after a while I told him my errand."

"And what did he say to that?"

"At first, nothing; he only looked surprised and suspicious, as though he thought that I was making game of him; then he held out his hand to me, with an ashamed look, and said, 'Philip, I behaved ill to you on Saturday; you said that I should repent it,—and I do!'"

"God bless you, my dear boy! You have acted like his child! For if ye love them which love you, what thank have ye? for sinners also love those that love them. But love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest: for he is kind unto the unthankful and to the evil. Be ye therefore merciful" (Luke vi. 32, 33, 36).

Reader, do you bear ill-will towards any one? Has any one injured or insulted you? Oh, forgive, as ye would be forgiven! Give up revengeful acts, silence angry words, lift up your heart in prayer for your enemy, return him good for evil. Lie not down to-night with anger in your heart; ask the Saviour to give you a spirit like His, that you may pass through life to eternity with all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love" (Eph. iv. 2).
