

itants quiet as a christian Sabbath, repose seems written on every feature of the place, but there is beauty in repose.

Mill Village, two miles distant, probably an offshoot of Parrabore, presents quite a contrast. Its eight vessels upon the "stocks," mostly of large dimensions, give employment to men and teams besides freight to vessels. These combined create a population, hence the rapid increase of dwelling houses and their appendages. While there are some very neat in their structure, it is to be regretted that others show evidently a want of taste and tidiness. A reform is evidently commenced, nor could it well longer be delayed, after the pretty cottage and well ornamented grounds of Rev. Mr. King have so well commended themselves to the lovers of order and neatness.

In this place and vicinity there are no less than seven places of worship. If grouped together their appearance would not be uninteresting as a matter of history, recording in their various orders the times of the past. The recorded presence of Jehovah, it is hoped, has been manifested in each, and this is of more importance than any or all outward adornment. The more fastidious might recall this, and seek more earnestly its manifestations.

Fruit is but little cultivated in this section of the country, although the apple tree might have a soil and atmosphere adapted to its necessity between some sheltering hills. The experiment would, at least, be worth a trial.

Farming operations are too much neglected for less stable means of support. The soil, though truly not of the most fertile character, would do more for the support of its inhabitants if it was better farmed. Science and persevering industry would remove many difficulties from such places and reward the toil bestowed. In this place, as in all too many others, an amount of time and time's earnings, beyond the calculation of most men, are spent for tobacco, that would do much for the supply of many a necessary of life, now out of the reach of the multitudes. This practice forsaken and the use of bread soda discontinued, and the doctors would find much less to do in their profession.

The road when traveling from this to Five Islands, a distance of ten or twelve miles, will be of great advantage to travellers, besides opening for settlers a fine tract of land for farming operations.

A half day's leisure gave an opportunity of visiting a recently talked of water-fall. From the road just referred to, distant from the village about five miles, a fine road brings you to one of the many romantic scenes that give to the geologist questions difficult of solution. A small stream of water comes dashing down a distance of some thirty or forty feet nearly perpendicular, into a basin of twenty feet diameter, it then tumbles circuitously, forming in its passage an arch under the side of the cliff, from which it finds its way over a ridge of the rock falling into a fissure thence into the "churn," a depth of thirty feet, as per my informant, and thence, "dashing and splashing," over time washed rocks to its base below. The deep gorge through which it passes, the over hanging rocks, the shade of forest trees, the abundance of wild flowers on every hand, all contributing to interest the thoughtful beholder, cannot but impress the mind with the thought that God hath been, and is, even now, present here. Its grandeur was no doubt, to the writer, increased by the thunder storm that was passing at the time. A visit to this place in a leisure hour, would to the lover of nature, and who does not love nature, repay the toil. And although Niagara's awful majesty is not there, yet the great Creator's handiwork is clearly revealed, and what ever brings the thought to God is not lost. In the infinitesimal as in the infinite, his perfections are beheld; sought out and known by all those that have pleasure therein.

The rain over us retraces our steps preparatory to greater and more solemn duties. A few attentive hearers are gathered to hear words of encouragement from the word of God. Thus closed the day, and thus closes my letter for the present.

Yours truly,
Parrabore, June 22, 1862.

For the Christian Visitor.
Mr. Editor.—The last number of your paper contains some strictures by Prof. Jones, on the account which I furnished some weeks ago, of the examination of the classes at Fredericton—especially on that part which related to reading.

In the first place, Mr. Jones seems to take it for granted that I was a prejudiced listener. An assumption that is entirely incorrect. I certainly could have had no prejudice against him; for I had neither seen him nor heard of him previous to the day of examination.

I listened with great pleasure to all the exercises, and was highly gratified with the general proficiency of the scholars, as well as satisfied that the Teachers were men of ability.

The implied charge of prejudice then is ungenerous. On the next point, I will quote Mr. Jones' own language. He says, "I have devoted a considerable portion of my time to reading, and have the satisfaction of knowing that with two exceptions they (the lads) have made rapid progress."

All this may be very true. It is possible that one short year ago not a member of that class could read at all. For aught I know this may have been the case; and if so, they certainly have made "rapid progress." But their progress was never questioned. With this therefore I have nothing whatever to do. I am very willing to receive Mr. Jones' self-recommendation of his ability to instruct, and his assertion in reference to the "progress" of his pupils as unquestionable facts; but with due deference to Mr. Jones, and those present who have expressed an opinion in terms of commendation, I still maintain without prejudice or ill-will toward any, that the reading was decidedly bad.

South Carolina Correspondence.
Georgetown, S. C. July 1, 1862.

This is one of the most antiquated and sleepy places I have yet visited. There are a few fine mansions, many magnificent trees shading the streets, and multitudes of negroes. All along the shores of Winyah Bay and the banks of the Santee river by which Georgetown is reached at a distance of fifteen miles from the sea, are fine rice plantations. This is the finest rice growing part of the South. Here the lordly owners of hundreds of slaves lived in all the ease and indolence which the Institution admitted. I have often lounged on the piazza of some fine old mansion, shaded by magnificent live oaks and surrounded by multitudes of fragrant flowers, and thought of the folly of secession. With a balmy climate, a prolific soil, with ease and luxury; in short, with everything, yet they rushed madly to arms, and lost all.

THE REBEL SOLDIERS are coming home daily. Many of them came to find out their homes were their houses are occupied by others, their lands are sold for taxes, or confiscated by the Government. They came home penniless of course, and to begin the world anew. There is a "look on them" sentences. I have seen hundreds of them.

is a little one horse town, five miles from Charleston, whither merchants from the sea, and its quite a romantic little place with wooden houses.

among tall pine trees. It is totally unlike anything in the North. There is a railway station, a little brook, one or two nice gardens, and several houses. Yet it is attractive for its loneliness.

is a place of much more pretension and wealth than either of these. About four miles from here on the Smith plantation, Rev. Dr. Adams wrote his "South side view." This place was a summer resort for those whose means did not admit of a trip to the more inaccessible North.

THE NEGROES
are exhibiting many the traits of character now that they are free. In many places they are taking care of their old masters, feeding and sheltering them. Old women will bring eggs and fruits and other nice things for those who once held them in bondage. I have found some of the noblest exhibitions of true manhood among the colored people that I ever met with.

Rev. Dr. Fyfe, President of the Baptist Institute, Woodstock, Canada West, is travelling for the benefit of his health. He arrived in this City by the Monday's train. His health, we are happy to say, is much improved, and he will probably leave by the boat on Thursday morning en route for Portland, Me., accompanied by Rev. J. Chase. He addressed a social meeting in Germain Street Baptist Vestry on Tuesday evening, and warmed all our hearts with a beautiful exposition of the nature and influence of the christian's hope.

Quarterly Meeting, Charlotte County, and other interesting Correspondence, crowded out for want of room—will appear next week.

COLONIAL.

The Morning Journal of Monday says, we are glad to be in a position to inform our readers that the European and North American Company of Maine have entered into a contract with Messrs. Pierce Blaisdell to complete the European and North American Railway from Bangor to Saint John, under the terms of the contract agreed upon with the Company here. These contractors, we are informed, are of the first class financial standing, and are able to carry out the agreement which they have concluded.

This contract is subject to the approval of the New Brunswick Government under the terms of the Railway Act of 1864. That approval obtained, the contractors will proceed with the work forthwith; they intend to submit the work in New Brunswick to local contractors, and hope to have this done in two or three months, at farthest. The building of this railroad would do much to revive our trade and industry at the present time; it would, also, add largely to our revenue, and help to keep our people in the country, as well as to attract immigrants. We trust that all matters will soon be settled on a sure basis. We have little doubt that the British Government could easily be induced to get the inter-colonial railroad started; it might even be proceeded with pending the settlement of the terms of the Union of the Colonies. The building of Western Extension might simplify the question of route, and these two works together would give ten or fifteen years prosperity to the provinces, to start with, and prepare the way for a vast development of our agricultural, mechanical and manufacturing industry.
