EVENING HYMN.

Thou, whose never-sleeping eye Pierces through obscurity, And whose never ending love Guards Thy children from above, Now I lay me down to rest, Bless me, and I shall be blest. Watch me, Father, till I wake, Keep me for my Saviour's sake.

Father! through the now past day Oft Thy child has gone astray : Yet-for Thou can'st look within, See repentance for my sin: Human frailty Thou dost know-What I would not, that I do; Father! e'en in Justice mild Pardon me-Thine erring child.

So, when I mine eyelids close, Thy great love shall give repose; Silent night shall bring no fear, Since I know that Thou art near. Though thy thunders all around Rave along the trembling ground, I shall hear my Saviour cry, "Be not fearful—it is I."

But should pain and agony Keep awake the weary eye, And the stillness seem more still, And the darkness full of ill; Through the black and solemn night, Till the happy morning light, Let Thine angels from above Be with me and all I love.

And when, near Eternity, Sterner night shall close on me, And the hard and laboured breath Cease at the approach of Death; Thou who camest on earth to save, Father, Conqueror of the Grave! In Thine arms, though friends may weep, Hush Thy little one to sleep.

THE PRISONER RELEASED. "Who can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin."—Prov. xx. 9.

There were many bright young faces in the day school which was taught by Willie Thorn, but there was one face which, though young, never wore a smile. In play-time many an orange, apple, or cake, was given by the school-boys to each other; but there, was one of whom no one ever seemed to think, one who never received even a look of kindness. Many of the boys Teturned to cheerful homes to repeat to their parents what they had heard from their teacher; but one felt desolate and alone in the world,there was none to welcome him to his wretched dwelling, for such a place cannot be called a home. Why did his companions dislike sitting next in school to the pale boy with the sunken cheek and the drooping eye; and why in the merry hours of play did they seek to exclude him from their circle? Alas! there was a stain on the character of Seth Delmar .- he had once been in prison for stealing bread from a baker, -he was now shunned and despised as a thief!

The poor boy had deeply repented of his sin, and now bitterly felt its consequences. In vain ions, and was most watchful over his own conduct. Thorn remarked the painful position of the child and feeling that to drive him into despair might be to drive him further into sin, and that not a little self-righteousness was at the bottom of the scorn with which his school-fellows treated the unhappy Seth, he resolved to take the first opportunity of speaking to them upon the subject, and of showing to them their conduct in its true

Seth, who was patient and persevering with his tasks, had gained from his teacher the prize of a small book; and the first gleam of pleasure which any one present had ever seen on his wan features, lighted them up for a moment as he received it. "It immediately faded away, however, las he glanced timidly round on his companions, and saw that no one cared for his success, that perhaps it would only add to the dislike felt towards

The next day Thorn observed the boy bending over this book, while large drops, in spite of his efforts to stop them, forced their way from his eyes as he looked on it. Seeing that something must have occurred, Thorn walked up to the spot, and found out at once the cause of Seth's distress. On the title page of the book Thorn had written his name; but just under it now appeared, in a very different hand, the single terrible word-THIEF!

This has been a most thoughtless, -I wish that I could say only thoughtless act," said Thorn, with an expression grave almost to sternness. "1 will not ask who is the author of this cruel insult, but we must suppose that he who thus condemns another, notwithstanding the warning, Judge not, that ye be not judged, is at least conscious that his own heart is pure, that he never has

The children looked at each other in silence, and then one, of the elder boys, Bat Nayland, muttered half aland, " Conscious of never having stolen a farthing !"

"I did not say, conscious of never having stolen, but of never having sinned. All sin is disobedience to the Most High, as sin to be repented of, and as sin to be punished, whether it be theft, falsehood, or unkindness to another. The law forbidding us to covet in our secret hearts was as solemnly given smid the terrors of Sinal, is as binding upon man, as 'Thou shalt do not mur-der.' If the chain-cable upon which the safety of a vessel depends be snapped assunder in a storm, no matter how small be the link that gives way, the chain is as truly broken, and the vessel as certainly in danger, as if it had been dashed into a thousand pieces." said Bat Nayland, "that there are some greater sinners, and greater commandments, and that we are not to be put on a level with thieves."

"Do you remember," said Thorn, mildly, turn-ing to a boy who was near him, "which our blessed Lord himself said were the two great commandments of the law?"

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself."

"And those who break the great commandments must, of course, be great sinners?"

There was a general murmur of assent.

"And now tell me," said Thorn, speaking more earnestly, and looking around him as he spoke, "which of us can plead not guilty to the charge of having broken these great commandments,— broken them often,—broken them every day of

No voice was raised in reply,—conscience was bearing silent witness against all. Thorn continued: "The Almightly has a claim to our greatest love,—he has created us, preserved us, redeemed us,—he has deigned to say, 'My son, give me thy heart! but which of us have obeyed the heavenly call? Has it been our delight to heavenly call ! Has it been our delight to be better him, to pray to him! have we thought on him with reverence, gratitude and love; seeking his glory before our own pleasure, making his will the law of our lives! This it is, may children, to keep the first commandment: if any one present feels in his heart that he never has wilfully broken it, let him now raise up his sold by Robertson Bros., Prince Wm. hand in token that he can say Not guilty to this charge !"

Every hand remained motionless and still. " And who has loved his neighbour as himself? Who has never done an unjust action, nor spoken an ill-natured word, nor harboured an envious thought in his heart? Guilty, all guilty, we stand before God! we have broken his commands, we have offended against his holiness; alas! who can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin!"

"And now," continued Thorn, after another solemn pause, " which of you here can give me a verse from the word of God which tells us the just punishment of sin?"

Seth answered, in a very low voice which would not have been heard but for the great silence which prevailed through the room, " The soul that sinucth, it shall die!"

"Then what is to become of us all ?" cried William Brown, who had but lately joined the school; "must all be punished, as all have sinned? is there no hope of escape?"

" Our hope is in the blessed Son of God, who came down to earth that he might raise as to heaven, - who bore our punishment that we might share his bliss. Through faith in him even the chief of sinners may be saved,-the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin."

"But then," said Nayland, " if those who have sinned much, and those who have sinned less, may all go to neaven if they only believe, it seems as if it did not matter whether we tried to obey or not,-as though, the Lord having done all, we have nothing teft to do." "God forbid that you should think so," hastily interrupted Thorn. " All must strive for holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord. If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. The Bible abounds in passages that show that for the wilfully disobedient, who will not repent, the Lord's despised mercy will but add to the punishment of their sin!"

"I do not quite understand this," said William

"In order to explain to you how our salvation, is only from the Lord, and yet that we must work out our salvation with fear and trembling, I will repeat to you a little allegory or parable. Remember that my tale is intended to convey a deeper meaning than what may at first sight apyear; exert your minds to discover that meaning, am telling you the history of man,-I amotelling you the history of yourselves."
