

Family Circle.

(From the Christian World.) MARGARET TORRINGTON; OR, THE VOYAGE OF LIFE.

By the Author of "Violet Vaughan," "St. Julian's Wife," "St. Beatha," &c. "So He bringeth them unto their desired haven."

GILBERT AND I. I gave myself a couple of jerks that were supposed to remedy the deficiencies in my toilet, and then, throwing a kiss at mamma, who, nodding pleasantly, resumed her work, I dashed down the shingly steep, and was soon threading my way among the salt-water pools which intersected there the sandy recesses.

Gilbert was a year older than myself; his father was a fisherman, and, as all the neighbours said, of a very good old Cornish family, "but come down in the world." Much further down, in point of worldly circumstances, they could not come; for Stephen Tredgold and his wife, though as decent as hands and thrifty could make them, were known to be miserably poor, for the fishing was not what it used to be—the "takes" were smaller and smaller, and the markets far from sure.

When we had exchanged greetings, Gilbert returned to the broken meshes of his net. Beside him, on the bank, thickly covered over with sea milk-wort and matted arenaria, lay a Latin grammar, my property, which, in the capacity of tutor, I had lent or given to the fisher-boy. My father had begun to teach me Latin almost as soon as I could read the Bible in my mother tongue, and so, at fourteen, I could read Virgil as easily as Watts' hymns.

Italian you were supposed to study in the last year of your pupillage, and then forget all about it, save as the pages of your music-book brought before you certain words that were decidedly not English. As for German, no one ever thought of such a thing, at least in mamma's young days, and so mamma was not to blame for knowing nothing of it, and, of course, she could not teach me what she did not know herself.

The loveliest we've had this year, Miss Margaret; it will be such a sunset presently! Only look this minute at the Rudhoe cliffs on t'other side the Bay!

Sure enough, the Rudhoe cliffs were glowing like ruddy bronze, in the level beams of the fast sinking sun, and the white cottages of the far-off Rudhoe village gleamed like silver in the hollow of the great scarred rocks; the sands were golden brown, and the spotless wings of the gulls and sea-mews flitted like pure snow-flakes against the deep and stainless azure of the sky.

"But the fish mustn't get away." "They do, they do, Miss Margaret; but that's no fault of mine; I mend them to the best of my ability; and then, if the pieces wear their fins, and get into deep water again, I can't help it; it's the good Lord's will."

"You do not suppose God troubles himself about mackerel, and whiting, and all the rest of the tribe?" "Well, Miss Margaret, I should say He does. Isn't it written that not a sparrow falls to the ground but what the Father knows of it? Well, then, surely He knows about the creatures of the watery world as well! I wish it was His will that the nets would hold together, and that the slippery things would stay to be caught, and creoled and sold."

A COMMON SENSE VIEW OF THE MODE IN WHICH Hostetter's STOMACH BITTERS ACT UPON THE HUMAN SYSTEM.

THIS is an age of inquiry. People want to know the why and wherefore of all statements submitted to them as facts, or as far as they can be proved to be true.

Now the pure liquid stimulant of which Hostetter's Bitters are in part composed, is charged with invaluable vegetable remedies, and used by reason of its powerful diffusive principle, it conveys to every organ and introduces into the circulation.

Under the general head of Dyspepsia may be classed all the varieties of indigestion. Its symptoms are so various, and differ so much in different individuals, that it is almost impossible to classify them. In fact, some of them are indescribable. It may be safely asserted, however, that half the diseases of mankind spring from a disordered state of the stomach; and that the most fatal whatever their origin, react upon that sensitive and important organ.

The disease proceeds from a lack of vigor in the stomach, and this vitalizing preparation will tone and renovate the organ. If the gastric apparatus is in good working order, and can perfectly dissolve and thoroughly assimilate the food admitted, it is not necessary to resort to any other means. If it cannot do this, it requires reinforcement, and the use of all reinforcing agents should be forthwith resorted to.

It is the only preparation of its kind that performs all that it promises. Acts directly upon the roots of the Hair, and its effects are Speedy and Permanent.
