MARGARET TORRINGTON ;

OR, THE VOYAGE OF LIFE. Author of "Violet Vaughan," "Sir Julian's Wife," "St. Beetha's," &c. bringeth them unto their desired haven."-

I hoped my uncle would go away next day, but he did not; and at last, to my extreme indignation, I overheard him telling Dr. Berners there must be a change soon, and he would wait till all was over. " Till all was over !" The words rang in my ears as I fled from the house into the garden; I scarcely knew where I went; anywhere, anywhere to be out of the sound of that cruel, heartless voice! Yes, all would be over when mamma was taken from me-I could not look beyond that time; the grave where one parent was already lying, and whither another was has-tening, seemed the boundary of my horizon. I felt as if in some sort my life would end there; I did not think I should die, but all my hopes, and fears, and aspirations would be ended. "What would become of me?" I really cared very little. I should not starve, I supposed, and I should have some kind of shelter for my wearied head; as for the rest, it mattered not. And all unconsciously, I endorsed the sentiment of Byron's Medora:

"With nothing left to love, there's nought to dread." And Mirrie-had she no anxieties-she, more really desolate than I, since no one in all the world claimed kindred with her? She was twelve years old now, and at an age to feel keenly the perplexities of her position, and, at times, I think she did muse very painfully on what might be in store for her; but I never sought her confidence, as I never gave her mine. I had grown suddenly into a grave, sorrowful woman, and I regarded her as still a child-a child whom I would protect if possible, but still one who could not share the burden of my sorrew. The "change" for which my uncle waited came all too soon. As far as I remember, it was the twelfth of October when Mr. Crofton came to Kelver House; that day week the blinds were drawn close down, and the hush of death was once more in our midst. Serenely beautiful, she lay at rest, my gentle, blessed mother! It was a sight to look upon with solemn joy, that pure, perfect face, exquisite as if the sculptor's chisel had just left it, a miracle of loveliness, a triumph of his art! And not colder could have been the graven marble than that snow-white brow and pearly cheek, and those fair hands-wasted, indeed, but still so fair-crossed peacefully upon the breast-the breast that would never again heave sob or sigh, or know the aching sense or loss! Even my uncle's stern face was changed when he came down from paying his last visit to that silent room, and he patted me on the shoulder and bade me cheer up, adding, half in solilo-quy—"I always said she was more lovely than any other woman I ever saw, and she might have married so well." And then turning suddenly to me-" Margaret, von will never be a beauty like your poor mother, but you will have a very fair share of good looks-the only share of good that will fall to you, I expect. Don't go and fling yourself away on the first man who talks poetry to you, and asks you to share his humble home. Shop humble homes: they are all very well in novels and poems, and in fancy landscapes; but in real life they are just the deuce! Don't follow your mother's example, and leave a penniless daughter to be provided for some twenty years I was too broken-hearted to reply, or I should doubtless have angered him, for if there was any other feeling in my heart than grief bitter and unfeigned, it was a feeling of horror at the idea of being provided for by him.

However, he had the mercy not to talk to me about "my affairs" till the funeral was over; though all day and every day he shut himself no in the library examining papers, going over accounts, and drawing up what he called " a statement." He was certainly a business man; and I began to perceive, as in spite of myself I watched his proceedings, and noticed the far-seeing skill which he brought to bear upon every iota of his task, that my poor father had not been business-

At last came the day when the coffin-lid covered all that remained to me of my mother; even the precious dust was borne away, and only the bare empty-room was left ; - bare and empty like my heart, that brooded over its own great void with a grief too deep for tears. Miriam's sorrow was very great, but she cried freely, and on the funeral-day most passionately; and she tried in her simple way to comfort me, telling me how heaven was not so very far off when those we loved were there !- and how the parting was but for a season! But I, looking up into the great silent sky that hung that day above the hills and over the sea like a dome of crystal, felt as if the distance were immeasurable-nay, infinite! I refused to hear one word of comfort: I was numb in my despair; I was like a person crushed in every limb, feeling little for the time, but knowing that hours of keenest torture were at band. And Clara Berners came, the tears streaming down her face while she talked to me; and she too spoke of the little space between this life and that beyond the grave!

But nothing comforted me, nothing eased the aching sense of loss and utter desolation; I only wished to be left alone with my great sorrow. Yes, in that hour I first proved the utter insufficiency of human sympathy, of earthly sources of consolation; I felt myself to be beyond the reach of all who came about me in their tender pity; they could not speak to my stricken heart! One only was there who could have said to me, as He said to little Mirrie in her equal sorrow. "Peace I leave with you; My peace give I unto you." But that One, that gracious, loving Friend, who sticketh closer than a brother, knew not. Nay, I had refused to know Him! He had knocked at the door of my heart, and I had heard, and would not open.

The next morning I came down to breakfast, feeling wretchedly ill and nervous: I had slept from mere exhaustion, but my sleep had been more like the stupefaction produced by drugs, than a regular, healthful slumber,—no wonder that I rose unrested and unrefreshed. I gave my that I rose unrested and unrefreshed. I gave my uncle his coffee, and then idly sipped my own; I made no effort to cat anything.

Presently, having made a pretty substantial repast, he said: "Now, Margaret, I want your attention for a little while in the library; your affairs, such as they are, must be settled. I would not intrude poon you while your poor mother was still upstairs; but now the last offices of affection have been performed, and though it is quite natural that you should continue to deplore your double loss, there is no reason, but very much the contrary, why you should not rouse yourself, and attend to those duties which lie before you."

"I AM A MISSIONARY, TOO."-It was said when the late Commodore Foote was in Siam, he had, upon one occasion, the king on board his vessel as a guest. Like a Christian, as he was, he did not hesitate in the royal presence to ask a blessing, as the guests took their places at the table.

"Why, that is just as the missionaries do," remarked the king with some surprise.

"Yes," answered the heroic sailor; "and I am a missionary too" a missionary, too." There is a most important lesson of Christian rotion and consistency in such an example.

COMMON SENSE VIEW OF THE MODE IN WHICH Hostetter's

STOMACH BITTERS

ACT UPON THE HUMAN SYSTEM.

THIS is an age of inquiry. People want to know the why and wherefore of all statements submitted to them as facts, and as far as this GREAT PROTECTIVE AND INVIGORANT

s concerned, it is proposed to gratify them.
All the physicians admit that the greatest difficulty they All the physicians admit that the greatest difficulty they encounter in their practice is in conveying to the seat of the disease the medicament that will counteract and neu tralize it. Electricity has been tried for this purpose, but it is now generally admitted that the electric fluid is too subtle an agent to be made the vehicle of medication. It shocks the nerves, but cannot distribute through the system anything except itself. Medicated electricity is, in short, an exploded humbing. But a liquid stimulant, as everybody knows, can be charged with the essential properties of any and every substance in the Materia Medica, and there is no herbial extract which it will not hold in solution with all its preventive and curative virtues name. lution, with all its preventive and carative virtues unim-

are in part composed, is charged with invaluable vegetable remedies; and these, by reason of its powerful diffusive principle, it conveys to every organ and introduces into the circulation. To use a common expression, it goes to the spot, taking with it just what is wanted there. The Essence of Rye would undoubtedly diffuse itself through the organization as swittly if administered pure and simple, as if mixed with the juices of tonic and alterative roots, barks and herbs. But of what use would it be without their healing, strengthening, life sustaining baim? It would merely excite. It could neither protect nor cure. And herein lies the essential difference between the effect of the purest stimulant when given alone, and the same stimulant when administered in the medicinal form of HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS. Good monongahela spirit is doubtless the mildest and most innocuous of all the varieties of liquor, but it only becomes a healthful medicine when im regnated with the vegetable elements employed in the preparation of the Bitters.

TO DYSPEPTIC SUFFERERS. Under the general head of Dyspepsia may be classed all the varieties of Indigestion. Its symptoms are so various, and differ so much in different individuals, that it is almost impossible to classify them. In fact, some of them are indescribable. It may be safely asserted, however, that half of the diseases of mankind spring from a disordered state of the stomach; and that the other half, whatever their origin, react upon that sensitive and important organ. Among the ordinary indications of Dyspensia are flatulence. origin, react upon that sensitive and important organ. Among the ordinary indications of Dyspepsia are flatulence, a bloated and full feeling about the stomach and abdomen immediately after eating, a guawing sensation, or a sense of hollowness at the pit of the stomach between meals, a dull beavy feeling in the head, feeble or unsteady appetite, occa-ional nausea, restlessness during the night, and a weary unrefreshed feeling on rising in the morning, palpitation of the heart, depression of mind, sometimes amounting to monomania, loss of memory, confusion of thought, sour stomach, with raising of food, and a choking sensation in the throat, dimness of the eye, pain in the diaphragm, feebleness and disinclination for exertion, and sometimes emaciation and accepts like pallor. These are a few of the direct signs of Dyspepsia, but as it is generally complicated with specific affections of the bowels, the liver and the nerves, its victims have many additional torments, which are technically attributed to other causes.

The best advice that can be given to any one who has the slightest predisposition to Dyspepsia, is to fortify his or her digestive organs by the daily use of HOSTETTER'S BITTERS.

The disease proceeds from a lack of vigor in the stomach, and this vitalizing preparation will tone and renovate that organ. If the gastric apparatus is in good working order, and can perfectly dissolve and thoroughly assimilate the food submitted to its operation, there will be no dyspepsia. It it cannot do this, it requires reinforcement, and the best of all reinforcing agents should be forthwith resorted to. The stomach is the commissary of the system. It supplies the elements of lite to the whole body. In it is prepared the material of blood, muscle, bone and fibre, and if it fails to purvey that material in sufficient quantity and of a proper the material of blood, muscle, bone and flore, and if it fails to purvey that material in sufficient quantity and of a proper kind, the whole body suffers, and with it the mental faculties. Therefore protect the "Commissary Department." Don't let the enemy obtain possession of it. It is easier to prevent disease from getting into an organ, than to expel it after it becomes a chronic fixture. Consider the first indication of uneasiness in the stomach as a sign that dyspepsia is preparing to attack, and baffle it at once with this great repellant.

But if, it is too late to prevent, remember that it is not too late to cure. It is believed that there is no case of chronic indigestion that can withstand the remedial operation of HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BIFTERS.

This belief is grounded on twelve years' experience of the efficacy of the preparation. The first instance of its failure to give relief is yet unchronicled. If it ever had failed, the voluminous correspondence addressed to the proprietors from all parts of the United States and South America, would at least include one letter expressing dissatisfaction. But no, there is not one! The testimony, extending over a period of more than a dezen years, is all of the same approving tenor. Certainly this is a sufficient warrant for claiming that the BITTER'S are a SPECIFIC FOR INDI-GESTION, IN ALL ITS VARIETIES.
